FIFTEENTH EDITION.

CHARACTERS OF THIS WORK.

1. By Dr. Johnson.

When at Oxford, I took up Law's Serious Call to a Holy Life, expecting to find it a dull book (as such books generally are), and perhaps to laugh at it; but I found Law quite an overmatch for me, and this was the first occasion of my thinking in earnest of religion, after I became capable of rational inquiry.—Vide Boswell's Life of Johnson, 3d edit. vol. 1. p. 43.

- He much commended 'Law's Serious Call,' which he said was the finest piece of hortatory theology in any language. Ibid, vol. 2, p. 118.
- 3. This excellent Treatise is wrote in a strong and nervous stile, and abounds with many new and sublime thoughts; in a word, one may say of this Book, as Sir Richard Steele did of a Discourse of Dr. South's, that it has in it whatever wit or wisdom can put together, and I will venture to add, that whoever sits down without prejudice, and attentively reads it throughout, will rise up the wiser man and better Christian.—Vide Gents. Mag. Nov. 1800.
- 4. The Writings of the Rev. Wm. Law will remain an everlasting testimony of the strength and purity of the English language.—John Wesley.

SOME ACCOUNT

REV. WILLIAM LAW,

To which are subjoined Two Letters from Clergymen in the established Church, strongly recommending the SERIOUS CALL, and other works of the Author; also his character, &c. by EDWARD GIBBON, Esq. the Roman historian, and a list of all his works.

THE Rev. W. Law was born in the town of King's Cliffe, in the county of Northampton, in the year 1686; his education, and the early years of his life, were very ferious, at what time he entered the University, or when he took his degree of A. M. cannot be exactly afcertained, but his leaving that place was about the year 1712: after having made great proficiency in every branch of human literature, afterwards, taking the advice of our Saviour to the rich young man, he totally renounced the world, and followed Christ, in meekness, humility, and felf-denial.

Mr Law was a bachelor all his life-time: in person, he was a well fet man, and rather of a dark complexion, though remarkably cheerful in his temper; fuch was his love of privacy, and a state of recollection, that it was very feldom indeed that he passed more than two hours in the company of any perion; with a very small patrimony he was remarkably charitable, particularly to his poor neighbours, the manufacturers of wooden ware, in and about King's Cliffe; in this benevolent disposition he was joined by the two maiden ladies, with whom he refided at King's Cliffe; their object was not to encourage the idle and diffolute, but to promote and facilitate the good intentions and endeavours of the industrious.

Such

Such also was the little value he set on money, that he gave the copies of all his works intended for publication to his bookseller; but for one of them, Messrs. Richardfons and Urquhart, insisted upon his acceptance of one hundred guineas.

We shall now relate part of what he uttered in his last illness, which was witnessed by the friend to whom he addressed the three letters which accompany this work.—Just before his blessed soul took its happy slight, to dwell for ever with the saints in bliss; the heavenly glory so opened itself in him, that he broke forth into the following exultation, which, shewing the truth of his own highly regenerate state, as well as the joyful reality of the life of God in the soul of man, deserves to be written in letters of gold, not only to convince the infidel, but also to comfort and confirm the pious pilgrim, in his journey, through the thorny wilderness of this world, into the peaceful regions of immortal bliss.

"Away with these filthy garments;" said this dying saint, "I feel a facred fire kindled in my soul, which will destroy every thing contrary to itself, and burn as a fiame of divine love to all eternity."

In such a triumph of holy joy did this extraordinary fervant of God resign his blessed spirit into the hands of his beloved lord and master, at the place of his nativity, the town of King's Cliffe, in the county of Northampton. And in the church-yard of that parish, he lies interred, under a handsome tomb, erected to his memory, by a particular and dear friend, who lived many years with him, and therefore had long known, and highly and justly esteemed his singular worth: which was expressed in the following lines, engraven by the direction of the same friend, on the top-stone of his tomb.

Here lyeth the body

OF THE LATE

Rev. WILLIAM LAW, A. M. Who died April 9, 1761.

AGED 75,

He was well known to the world by a number of truly christian, pious writings exemplified by a life spent in a manner suitable to a worthy and true disciple of his heavenly, divine, crucified master and Saviour Jesus Christ, who lived and spoke in him and by him. In his younger days, he sufficiently distinguished himself, by his parts and progress in human literature. Afterwards taking the advice of our Saviour to the rich young man, he totally renounced the world and followed Christ, in meekness, humility and self-denial. And in his last years, he was wholly absorbed in his love to God and mankind; so that virtue in him was nothing but heavenly love and heavenly slame.

In parts and fense, inferior to none, With wit most amiable, with learning stored; His talents great and high were quite sublimed, In loving God with all his heart and mind. His time was all employ'd in things divine, By serving God, in goodness to mankind. The poor, the maim'd, the blind have lost in him, The kind protector, and the ready friend.

Some time after his decease the following verses appeared in print:

To the memory of that excellent man, and truly illuminated divine, the late Rev. WILLIAM LAW, A. M. These following lines are offered by one who has received great benefit from his most valuable works.

FAREWEL, good man! whose great and heav'nly mind, In love embrac'd the whole of human kind, From earth's dark scene, to realms of joy and light, Thy soul congenial, took her happy slight; With kindred spirits mix'd, and bright as they, Thou drink'st with them the streams of endless day: While we below lament thy absence most, Like all true worth, then dearest, when 'tis lost.

Bound

Bound to no feet, to no one party tied, To fons of God in ev'ry clime allied: Like light's great orb, to no one realm confin'd. Thy heav'n taught foul capacious grafp'd mankind. Of pains fevere, thou felt'it the tort'ring fmart, While grace pour'd comfort on thy better part. Thy will refign'd, with breath unmurm'ring bore, * Thy last sharp passage to the heav'nly shore. Thy heart's best image, still, thy writings, shine, One spirit breathe, the dove and lamb divine. [charm, Though stopt thy tongue, thy foul's strong breathings Though cold thy clay, thy ardent thoughts still warm. Awak'd by thee, we feel the heav'nly fire, And with feraphic flames to God aspire; Thy pious zeal transfus'd to other hearts, New springs of bliss, and nobler life imparts. No time, no numbers, can exhauft thy mine, Thy gifts are full: posterity is thine. Through future ages shall thy labours go, Like streams, enriching nations as they flow; Who, while perusing, catch the sacred fire, Fetch the deep figh, and pant with strong defire, For glory lost: heav'n let thy pencil rays, To paint that glory, and diffuse its blaze, Though for these days thy colours are too bright, And hurt weak eyes by their too radiant light; Yet wisdom's sons, tho' few, to good awake, Drink thy fweet fpring, and bread celestial break. Midft Babel's various tongues, tho' thousands stray, In thee, the wanderer finds his master's way. In heaps, let critics, commentators, lie, Thy works will make a christian library. In vain shall malice feek to wound thy name, Or ignorance thy folid worth defame. Retract your cenfures, you who dare be good; Confess your heads ne'er yet have understood The pearls, which God to mystic sons reveal'd; From the prefumptuous, wisdom's fount is seal'd. Yet this her child, wants no man's Pen to praife, Nor flander dreads, in these degen'rate days:

The following is the remarks of Edward Gibbon, Esq. on the Rev. Mr Law, and his works extracted from his memoirs in 2 vols 4to.

His words are:

"Mr Law died at an advanced age, of a suppression of urine, in 1761, at the house of Mrs Hesther Gibbon, known by the name of the Cliffe, in Northamptonthire, where the still resides. In that family he has left the reputation of a worthy and eminently-pious man, who believed all that he professed, and practised all that he enjoined. The character of a Non-juror, which he held to the last, is a sufficient evidence of the tenaciousness of his principles in Church and State; and the facrifice of his interest to his conscience will be always respectable.

"His theological writings, which our domestic concerns induced me to read, preferve an amiable though imperfect fort of life, in my opinion; but here, perhaps, I pronounce with more confidence than knowledge on the merits of the man no pen can justify. His last compositions seemed tinctured too much with the mystic enthusiasm of Jacob Behmen; and his discourse on the absolute unlawfulness of the stage may be called a ridiculous intemperance of fentiment and language.

"But thefe fallies of phrenzy must not extinguish the praise that is due to Mr. Law, as a wit and a scholar. His argument on topics of less absurdity is specious and acute; his manner is lively, his style forcible and clear; and, had not the vigour of his mind been clouded by enthusiasm, he might be ranked with the most agreeable and ingenious writers of the times.

"While the Bangorian controverly was a fashionable theme, he entered the lifts. He refumed the contest again with Bishop Hoadly, in which his Non-juring principles appear, though he approves himself equal to both Prelates.

"On the appearance of the "Fable of the Bees," he drew his pen against the licentiousness of the doctrine of that writer; and Morality and Religion must rejoice in his applause and victory.

"Mr Law's master-piece, the "Serious Call," is still read as a popular and powerful book of devotion. His precepts are rigid, but they are formed and derived from the Gospel; his satire is sharp, but his wisdom is from the knowledge of human life; and many of his portraits are not unworthy the pen of La Bruyere. If there yet exists a spark of piety in his reader's mind, he will soon kindle it to a slame; and a philosopher must allow that he is more consistent in his principles than any of the tribe of mystic writers. He handles with equal severity and truth the strange contradiction between faith and practice in the Christian world. Under the names of Flavia and Miranda, he has admirably deferibed Mr Gibbon's two aunts, the worldly and the pious sisters."

Such is the character this famous historian is compelled by the spirit of truth, to give to the piety and goodness of Mr Law, the most eminent and original writer of his day; the list of his works, which we now insert, together with two excellent letters from clergymen in the established Church, referring to them and him, is taken from the Gent. Mag. Nov. 1800.

His works are,

15. A Collection of Letters on the most interesting and important Subjects, and on several Occasions. 8vo.

16. Of Justification by Faith and Works; a Dialogue between a Methodist and a Churchman, 8vo.

17. An humble, earnest, and affectionate Address to the Clergy, 8vo.

1. " Sir,

" — Sunt certa piacula, que te Ter pure lecto poterunt recreare libello." Hor.

"As I have an universal love and esteem for all mankind, so particularly for my brethren of the Established Church, of which I should think myself an unworthy member, did I not take all opportunities of doing good according to the abilities with which God has enabled me. But as I have ever thought a concern for men's fouls to be preferable to that of their bodies, fo I have in a more especial manner extended my charity to that better part. We live in an age wherein num'rous objects prefent themselves to our view, that are destitute of every virtue that can make them worthy of the divine favour, and confequently there never will be wanting occasions for exercising ourselves in a laudable endeavour to their amendment. I, for my own part, though I live, (when at home) in a finall country village, have had fufficient work upon my hands to bring my parishioners to any tolerable degree of piety and goodness: I preached and laboured amongst them inceffantly, and yet, after all, was convinced my work had been as fruitless as casting pearls before swine; the drunkard continued his nocturnal practices, and the voice of the fwearer was still heard in our streets. However, I was determined to leave no means untried for bringing this profane and obdurate people to a fense of their duty; accordingly I purchased many religious books, and distributed them amongst them: but, alas! I could perceive no visible effects. In short, I had the grief to find, that all my labour had proved in vain, and was ready to cry out with St. Paul, Who is fufficient for these things? About this time I happened to peruse a treatife of Mr Law's intituled, "A ferious Call to a devout and holy Life;" with which (if I may be allowed the expression) I was so charmed and greatly edified, that I refolved my flock should partake of the same spiritual food; I therefore gave to each person in my parish one of those useful books, and charged them upon my bleffing (for I confider them as my children) to carefully perufe the fame. My perfeverance was now rewarded with fuccess; and I had the fatisfaction of beholding my people reclaimed, from a life of folly and impiety, to a life of holiness and devotion.

"Before I conclude, I must beg leave to recommend the afore-mentioned book to the perusal of all your readers; and I heartily wish they may receive as much benefit therefrom, as those have who are committed to my charge.

"This excellent treatife is wrote in a ftrong and nervous style, and abounds with many new and sublime thoughts:

thoughts: in a word, one may fay of this book as Sir Richard Steel did of a discourse of Dr. South's, that it has in it whatever wit and wisdom can put together; and I will venture to add, that whoever fits down without prejudice and attentively reads it throughout, will rife up the wifer man and better Christian,

"It remains now only that I mention a word or two concerning the author. This worthy clergyman has been accused (by those lukewarm-Christians, who ridicule all degrees of piety, that are above the common standard) of Methodism; a charge as false as it is cruel. I fay not this as my own private opinion, but from the testimony of several gentlemen of undoubted credit, who are acquainted with his manner of life and conversation. Indeed, this is fufficiently demonstrated in many parts of this author's works, particularly in his Three Letters to the Bishop of Bangor, wherein he writes in vindication of the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England. All which evidently declare the reverend author to be an orthodox divine, and an indefatigable labourer in the Lord's vineyard.

2. "Sir, North Crawley, Feb. 6th. 1772.

"I perused the letter signed Ouranius in your paper* with that cordial complacency which every faithful fleward must feel, from observing the furtherance of his master's interest: and I devoutly wish that every other fellow-labourer was as affiduous in fowing the good feed, as the enemy feems in fowing the tares.

"But while I approve and applaud Ouranius's zeal in recommending that excellent practical fummary of Christian duty, the Serious Call, I feem to regret the limitation of it to that treatife alone, when to me it appears that a ferious attention to those sublime tracts of the fame divinely illuminated writer, "The Spirit of Prayer," and "The Spirit of Love," would be productive of at least equal advantages, especially at a season when the serpent is winding about, infinuating his dead-

mily Bibles.

"To know whom we worship, to entertain proper notions of GOD, is the first necessary principle of true religion. And these volumes are calculated to convey fuch exalted and amiable ideas of God, and to unfold in fo rational and delightful a manner, the great mysteries of redemption and regeneration, that whoever peruses them with candour and attention will find in them a perfect key to the Holy Scriptures, "having (if I may be allowed the facred language) the glory of God, and his light, like unto a stone most precious, clear as crystal." And, befide informing his understanding, if they do not elevate his heart to an exalted pitch of love and devotion to his great benefactor, and cause it to overflow in ftreams of grateful benevolence to all mankind, he must be among those obdurate insensibles who need our pity and our prayers.

"The happy effects here promifed are not the mere speculative conjectures of fancy, for I have only described what were my own feelings upon the same occasion. And I will farther venture to declare, that I received more light and satisfaction from the perusal of these little volumes, than I had been able to extract from many volumes of letter-learned commentators, darkened illustrations and bodies of Divinity, which I had before carefully read with the fame temper and defire.

"I am fo far in the fame unfortunate predicament with Ouranius, never to have enjoyed the bleffedness of that holy man's conversation; but I have it well authenticated that he faithfully practifed what he taught, or, in Burkitt's words, that his was "a preaching life as well as a preaching doctrine." And that pious difregard and contempt of the riches and honours of the world, which he so pathetically recommends to others, himfelf eminently displayed in refusing some of the best preferments in the bishop of London's gift, when profeered by his friend Dr Sherlock, in reward of the unanswerable letters to the bishop of Bangor.

"The charge of Methodism I never heard infinuated against him, and could proceed only from those who must be totally ignorant of the tenets of that sect, or un-

acquainted with any among the writings of our able defender of church discipline and authority, and especially of the last except one, "on Justification by Faith and Works."

"But not to leave myself liable to reprehension for the partiality I have noticed in another, I am persuaded, that whoever has imbibed knowledge at this pure fountain will never cease thirsting while there remains a drop of the facred spring untasted. And that every scrip of that divinely-directed pen may be as extensive as was the writer's benevolence, is the ardent prayer of your sincere well-wisher,

"THEOPHILOS."

Yours, &c.

The following are the Author's Letters to a Friend.

LETTER I*.

Worthy and dear Sir,

My heart embraces you, with all the tenderness and affection of christian love; and I earnestly beg of God to make me a messenger of his peace to your soul.

You feem to apprehend I may be much furprifed at the account you have given of yourfelf. But, Sir, I am neither furprifed nor offended at it. I neither condemn nor lament your state: but shall endeavour to shew you how soon it may be made a blessing and happiness to you. In order to which, I shall not enter into a consideration of the different kinds of trouble you have fet forth at large. I think it better to lay before you the one true ground and root, from whence all the evil and disorders of human life have sprung. This will make it easy for you to see what that is, which must and only can, be the full remedy and relief for all of them, how different soever, either in kind or degree.

The fcripture has affured us, that God made man in his own image and likeness; a sufficient proof, that man, in his first state, as he came forth from God, must have been absolutely free from all vanity, want, or distress of any kind, from any thing, either within or without him. It would be quite absurd and blasphemous to suppose, that a creature beginning to exist in the image and likeness of God, should have a vanity of life, or vexation of spirit. A God-like persection of nature, and a painful distressed nature, stand in the utmost contrariety to one another.

Again, the scripture has affured us, that man that is born of a woman hath but a short time to live, and is full of mifery: therefore man now is not that creature that he was by his creation. The first divine and God-like nature of Adam, which was to have been immortally holy in union with God is loft, and instead of it, a poor mortal of earthly flesh and blood, born like a wild affes coit, of a fhort life, and full of mifery, is, through a vain pilgrimage, to end in dust and ashes. Therefore let every evil, whether inward or outward, only teach you this truth, that man has infallibly lost his first divine life in God; and that no possible comfort, or deliverance, is to be expected, but only in this one thing, that though man had lost his God, yet God is become man, that man may be again alive in God, as at his first creation. For all the mifery and diffrefs of human nature, whether of body or mind, is wholly owing to this one cause, that God is not in man, nor man in God, as the state of his nature requires: it is because man has lost that first life of God in his foul, in and for which he was created. He loft this light and spirit and life of God, by turning his will, imagination, and defire into a taffing and fenfibility of the good and evil of this earthly, bestial world.

Now here are two things raised up in man, instead of the life of God:—First; self or selfishness, brought forth by his chusing to have a wisdom of his own, contrary to the will and instruction of his Creator.—Secondly; an earthly bestial, mortal life and body, brought forth by his eating that food, which was posson to his paradistical nature. Both these must therefore be removed; that is, a man must first totally die to self, and all earthly desires, views and intentions, before he can be again in God, as his nature and first creation requires.

But now, if this be a certain and immutable truth, that man, fo long as he is a felfish earthly minded creature, must be deprived of his true life, the life of God, the spirit of heaven in his foul; then how is the face of things changed! for then, what life is fo much to be dreaded. as a life of worldly eafe and prosperity? what a misery, nay, what a curfe, is there in every thing that gratifies and nourishes our felf-love, felf-efteem, and felf-feeking? On the other hand, what a happiness is there in all inward and outward troubles and vexations, when they force us to feel and know the hell that is hidden within us, and the vanity of every thing without us: when they turn our felf-love into felf-abhorrence, and force us to call upon God, to fave us from ourselves, to give us a new life, new light, and new spirit in Christ Jesus.

O happy famine! might the poor prodigal have well faid, "which by reducing me to the necessity of asking to eat husks with swine, brought me to myself, and caused my return to my first happiness, in my father's house."

Now, fir, I will suppose your distressed state to be as you reprefent it; inwardly, darkness, heaviness and confusion of thoughts and passions; outwardly, ill usage from friends, relations, and all the world; unable to ftrike up the least spark of light or comfort, by any thought or reasoning of your own.

O happy famine, which leaves you not fo much as the husk of one human comfort to feed upon! For, my dear friend, this is the time and place for all that good and life, and falvation, to happen to you, which happened to the prodigal fon. Your way is as fhort, and your You have no more to do fuccess as certain, as his was. than he had. You need not call out for books and methods of devotion: for, in your present state, much reading, and borrowed prayers, are not your best method. All that you are to offer to God, all that is to help you to find him to be your Saviour and Redeemer, is best taught and expressed by the distressed state of your heart.

Only let your prefent and past distress make you feel and acknowledge this two-fold great truth: first, that in and of yourfelf, you are nothing but darkness, vanity and mifery. Secondly, that of yourfelf, you can no more more help yourself to light and comfort, than you can create an angel. People, at all times, can seem to assent to these two truths, but then it is an assent that has no depth or reality, and so is of little or no use. But your condition has opened your heart, for a deep and full conviction of these truths. Now give way, I besech you to this conviction, and hold these two truths in the same degree of certainty, as you know two and two to be four; and then, my dear friend, you are, with the prodigal, come to yourself; and above HALF YOUR WORK IS DONE.

Being now in the full possession of these two truths, feeling them in the same degree of certainty, as you seel your own existence, you are under this sensibility to give yourself absolutely and entirely to God in Christ Jesus, as into the hands of infinite love: firmly believing this great and infallible truth, that God has no will towards you, but that of infinite love, and infinite desire to make you a partaker of his divine nature; and that it is as absolutely impossible for the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, to resuse you all that good, and life, and salvation, which you want, as it is for you to take it by your own power.

O, fir, drink deep of this cup; for the precious water of eternal life is in it. Turn unto God with this faith; cast yourself into this abyse of love; and then you will be in that state the prodigal was in, when he said, I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; and all that, will be fulfilled in you, which is related of him.

Make this, therefore the two-fold exercife of your heart: Now, bowing yourfelf down before God, in the deepeft fense and acknowledgment of your own nothingness and vileness; then, looking up to God in faith and love, consider him as always extending the arms of his mercy towards you, and full of an infinite defire to dwell in you, as he dwells in the angels in heaven. Content yourself with this inward and simple exercise of your heart, for a while; and seek, or like nothing in any book but that which nourishes and strengthens this state of your heart.

Come unto me, fays the holy Jesus, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you. Here, my dear friend, is more for you to live upon, more light for your mind, more of unction for your heart, than in volumes of human instruction. Pick up the words of the holy Jesus, and beg of him to be the light and life of your soul: Love the sound of his name; for Jesus is the love, the sweetness, the meekness, the compassionate goodness of the deity itself; which became man, that so men might have power to become the sons of God. Love, pity, and wish well to every soul in the world; dwell in love, and then you dwell in God: hate nothing but the evil that stirs in your own heart.

Teach your heart this prayer till your heart continually faith, though not with outward words: "O holy Jefus, meek Lamb of God! Bread that came down from heaven! Light and life of all holy fouls! help me to a true and living faith in thee. O do thou open thyfelf within me, with all thy holy nature, spirit, tempers, and inclinations, that I may be born again of thee; and be in thee a new creature, quickened and revived, led and governed by thy holy spirit."

LETTER II.

July 20.

My dear worthy Friend,

Whom I heartily love in the unity of the spirit of Christ. Your long letter I received some time the last month, and read with much pleasure. For, long as it was, I did not wish it to be shorter. I bless God for that good and right spirit, which breathed in every part of it. As it required no immediate answer, and you lest me to my own time, so I did not intend to write till last week; but by accidental affairs, have been hindered from complying with my intention till now.

Your judgment has failed you in nothing, but in thinking your letter would be difagreeable to me; or that myanfwer was deferred on that account. Every creature has my love; but persons of your spirit kindle in me every holy affection of honour and esteem towards them? Love with its fruits of meekness, patience, and humility, is all that I wish, for myself, and every human creature: For this is to live in God, united to him, both for time and eternity. Would you have done with error, fcruple and delusion, consider the Deity (as I have said) to be the greatest love, the greatest meekness, the greatest fweetness; the eternal unchangeable will to be a good and bleffing to every creature; and that all the mifery, darkness and death, of fallen angels, and fallen men, confifts in their having loft this divine nature. Confider yourself, and all the fallen world, as having nothing to feek or wish for, but by the spirit of prayer to draw into the life of your foul, rays and sparks of this divine, meek, loving, tender nature of God. Confider the holy Jefus as the gift of God to your foul, to begin and finish the birth of God and heaven within you, in spite of every inward or outward enemy. These three infallible truths heartily embraced, and made the nourishment of your foul, fhorten and fecure the way to heaven, and leave no room for error, fcruple, or delufion. The poverty of our fallen nature, the depraved workings of flesh and blood, the corrupt tempers of our polluted birth in this world, do us no hurt, fo long as the spirit of prayer works contrary to them, and longs for the first birth of the light and fpirit of heaven.

All our natural evil ceases to be our own evil, as soon as our will-spirit turns from it: It then changes its nature, loses all its poison and death, and only becomes our holy cross, on which we happily die from self, and this world, into the kingdom of heaven.

I much congratulate you on your manner of prayer: fo practifed, it becomes the life of the foul, and the true food of eternity. Keep in this flate of application to God, and then you will infallibly find it to be the way of rifing out of the vanity of time, into the riches of eternity.

Do not expect or look for the fame degrees of fenfible fervour.—The matter lies not there.—Nature will have its share; but the ups and downs of that are to be overlooked.—Whilst your will-spirit is good, and fet right, the changes of creaturely servour lesson not your union with God. It is the abyss of the heart, an unfathomable depth of eternity within us, as much above fensible fervour, as heaven is above earth; it is this that works our way to God, and unites us with heaven. This abyss of the heart, is the divine nature and power within us, which never calls upon God in vain, but whether helped or deserted by bodily servour, penetrates through all outward nature, as easily and effectually as our thoughts can leave our bodies, and reach into the regions of eternity

I am, with hearty prayers to God for you,

Your truly affectionate

Friend and fervant,

W. LAW.

LETTER III.

My dear L-

I am greatly rejoiced at your expressing so feeling a fense of the benefit of prayer; and hope you will every day be more and more raised to, and united with God, by it.

I love no mysterious depths, or heights of speculation, covet no knowledge, want to see no ground of nature, grace, and creature, but so far as it brings me nearer to God, forces me to forget and renounce every thing for him, to do every thing in him, and for him; and to give every breathing, moving, stirring intention and desire of my heart, soul, spirit and life to him.

It is for the fake of the spirit of prayer, that I have endeavoured to set so many points of religion in such a view as must dispose the reader, willingly to give up all that he inherits from his fallen father, to be all hunger and thirst after God, and have no thought or care, but how to be wholly his devoted instrument, every where, and in every thing, his adoring, joyful, and thankful servant.

When

When it is the one ruling, never ceafing defire of our hearts, that God may be the beginning and end, the reason and motive, of our doing or not doing, from morning to night; then every where, whether speaking or filent, whether inwardly or outwardly employed, we are equally offered up to the eternal Spirit, have our life in him, and from him, and are united to him by that spirit of prayer, which is the comfort, the support, the strength, and security of the soul, travelling, by the help of God, through the vanity of time into the riches of eternity.

My dear friend, have eyes shut and ears stopped, to every thing, that is not a step in that ladder that reaches from earth to heaven.

Reading is good, hearing is good, conversation and meditation are good; but then they are only good at times and occasions, in a certain degree: and must be used and governed with such caution, as we eat and drink, and refresh ourselves, or they will bring forth in us the fruits of intemperance.

But the spirit of prayer, is for all times, and all occafions; it is a lamp that is to be always burning, a light that is ever shining: Every thing calls for it, every thing is to be done in it, and governed by it. Because it is, and means, and wills nothing else, but the totality of the soul, not doing this, or that, but wholly, incessantly given up to God, to be where, and what, and how he pleases.

This state of absolute resignation, naked faith, and pure love of God, is the highest perfection and most purished life; of those who are born again from above, and through the Divine Power, become sons of God. And is neither more nor less, than what our blessed Redeemer has called and qualified us. to long and aspire after, in these words, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done, on earth as in heaven.

Near the conclusion of yours, you fay, fince your last to me, you have met with a great many trials disagreeable to flesh and blood, but that adhering to God, is always your blessed relief.

Yet permit me on this occasion, to transcribe a memorandum or two, from an old scrap of paper, which has long lain by me for my own use.

1. Receive every inward and outward trouble, every disappointment, pain, uneafiness, darkness, temptation, and desolation, with both thy hands, as a true opportunity, and bleffed occasion, of dying to felf, and entering into a fuller fellowship with thy felf-denying, suffering Saviour.

2. Look at no inward, or outward trouble, in any other view, reject every other thought about it; and then every kind of trial and diffres, will become the bleffed day of thy prosperity.

3. Be afraid of feeking or finding comfort in any thing but God alone. For that which gives thee comfort, takes so much of thy heart from God. "Quid est cor purum? cui ex toto, et pure sussicion folus Deus, cui nihil fapit, quod nihil delectat, nisi Deus." That is, What is a pure heart? One to which God alone is totally and purely sussicient; to which nothing relishes or gives delight, but God alone.

4. That state is best, which exerciseth the highest faith in, and fullest refignation to God.

5. What is it that you want and feek, but that God may be all in all in you? But how can this be, unless all creaturely good and evil, become as nothing in you, and to you?

"Oh anima mea, abstrahe te ab omnibus. Quid tibi cum mutabilibus creaturis? Solum sponsum tuum, qui omnium est author creaturarum, expectans, hoc age, ut cor tuum ille liberum et expeditum semper inveniat, quoties illi ad ipsum venire placuerit." That is, O my soul! withdraw thyself from all things. What hast thou to do with changeable creatures? Waiting and expecting thy bridegroom, who is the author of all creatures, let it be thy only care, that he may find thy heart free and disengaged, as often as it shall please him to visit thee.

I thank you for your kind offer about the manuscript in the sale, but have no curiofity that way. I have had all that I can have from books. I leave the rest to God. I have formerly given away many of the lives of good

Armelle,

Armelle, fo can have no diflike to your doing the fame. I have often wished for some, or several little things of that kind, though more according to my mind; by which the meanest capacities might, in an easy manner, be led into the heart and spirit of religion.

Dear Man, adieu.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Nature and Extent of Christian Devotion.

EVOTION is neither private nor public prayer; but Prayers, whether private or public, are particular parts or instances of Devotion. Devotion figni-fies a life given, or devoted God.

He therefore is the devout Man, who lives no longer to his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God, who considers God in every thing, who serves God in every thing, who makes all the parts of his common life, parts of piety, by doing every thing in the name of God, and under such rules as are conformable to his glory.

We readily acknowledge, that God alone is to be the rule and measure of our prayers, that in them we are to look wholly unto him, and act wholly for him, that we are only to pray in such a manner, for such things, and fuch ends as are fuitable to his glory.

Now let any one but find out the reason why he is to be thus strictly pious in his prayers, and he will find the same as strong a reason to be as strictly pious in all the other parts of his life. For there is not the least shadow of a reason, why we should make God the rule and measure of our prayers, why we should then look wholly unto him, and pray according to his will; but what equally to avoid his company. But if a person only tells him, that he may live as the generality of the world does, that he may enjoy himself as others do; that he may spend his time and money as people of fashion do, that he may conform to the sollies and frailties of the generality, and gratify his tempers and passions as most people do, Julius never suspects that man to want a christian spirit, or that he is doing the devil's work.

And yet if Julius was to read all the New Testament from the beginning to the end, he would find his course of life condemned in every page of it.

And indeed there cannot any thing be imagined more abfurd in itfelf, than wife and fublime, and heavenly Prayers added to a life of vanity and folly, where neither labour nor diversions, neither time nor money, are under the direction of the wisdom and heavenly tempers of our Prayers. If we were to see a man pretending to act wholly with regard to God in every thing that he did, that would neither spend time or money, or take any labour or diversion, but so far as he could act according to strict principles of reason and piety, and yet at the same time neglect all prayer, whether public or private, should we not be amazed at such a man, and wonder how he could have so much folly along with so much religion?

Yet this is as reasonable as for any person to pretend to strictness in devotion, to be careful of observing times and places of Prayer, and yet letting the rest of his life, his time and labour, his talents and money be disposed of, without any regard to strict rules of piety and devotion, for it is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers, and divine petitions, without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life with-

Let any one therefore think, how easily he could confute a man that pretended to great strictness of life without prayer, and the same arguments will as plainly confute another, that pretends to strictness of prayer, without carrying the same strictness into every other part of life. For to be weak and foolish in spending our time and fortune, is no greater a mistake, than to be weak and soolish in relation to our prayers. And to allow allow ourselves in any ways of life that neither are, nor can be offered to God, is the same irreligion as to neglect our prayers, or use them in such a manner, as makes them an offering unworthy of God.

The short of the matter is this, either reason and religion prescribe rules and ends to all the ordinary actions of our life, or they do not: If they do, then it is as neceffary to govern all our actions by those rules, as it is necessary to worship God. For if religion teaches us any thing concerning eating and drinking, or spending our time and money, if it teaches us how we are to use and contemn the world; if it tells us what tempers we are to have in common life, how we are to be disposed towards all people, how we are to behave towards the fick, the poor, the old and destitute; if it tells us whom we are to treat with a particular love, whom we are to regard with a particular efteem: if it tells us how we are to treat our enemies, and how we are to mortify and deny ourselves, he may be very weak, that can think these parts of religion are not to be observed with as much exactness, as any doctrine that relate to prayers.

It is very observable, that there is not one command in all the gospel for public worship; and perhaps it is a duty that is least infifted upon in scripture of any other. The frequent attendance at it is never fo much as mentioned in all the New Testament. Whereas that religion or devotion, which is to govern the ordinary actions of our life, is to be found in almost every verse of scripture. Our bleffed Saviour and his apostles are wholly taken up in doctrines that relate to common life. They call us to renounce the world, and differ in every temper and way of life, from the spirit and way of the world. To renounce all its goods, to fear none of its evils, to reject its joys, and have no value for its happiness. To be as new born babes, that are born into a new state of things, to live as pilgrims in spiritnal watching, in holy fear, and heavenly aspiring after another life. To take up our daily cross, to deny ourselves, to profess the blessedness of mourning, to feek the bleffedness of poverty of spirit. To forfake the pride and vanity of riches, to take no thought for the morrow, to live in the profoundest state of humility, to rejoice in worldly fufferings. To reject the lust of the slesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life; to bear injuries, to forgive and bless our enemies, and to love mankind as God loveth them. To give up our whole hearts and affections to God, and strive to enter through the straight gate into a life of eternal glory.

This is the common devotion which our bleffed Saviour taught, in order to make it the common life of all christians. Is it not therefore exceeding strange, that people should place so much piety in the attendance of public worship, concerning which there is not one precept of our Lord's to be found, and yet neglect these common duties of our ordinary life, which are commanded in every page of the gospel? I call these duties the devotion of our common life, because if they are to be practised, they must be made parts of our common life, they can have no place any where else.

If contempt of the world, and heavenly affection, is a necessary temper of Christians, it is necessary that this temper appear in the whole course of their lives, in their manner of using the world, because it can have no place any where elfe.

If felf-denial be a condition of falvation, all that would be faved must make it a part of their ordinary life. If humility be a christian duty, then the common life of a Christian is to be a constant course of humility in all its kinds. If poverty of spirit be necessary, it must be the spirit and temper of every day of our lives. we are to relieve the naked, the fick, and the prisoner, it must be the common charity of our lives, as far as we can render ourselves able to perform it. If we are to love our enemies, we must make our common life a visible exercife and demonstration of that love. If content and thankfulness, if the patient bearing of evil be duties to God, they are the duties of every day, and in every circumstance of our life. If we are to be wife and holv as the new-born fons of God, we can no otherwise be so, but by renouncing every thing that is foolish and vain in every part of our common life. If we are to be in Christ new Creatures, we must show that we are so, by having new ways of living in the world. If we are to follow Christ.

Christ, it must be in our common way of spending every day.

Thus it is in all the virtues and holy tempers of chriflianity, they are not ours, unless they be the virtues and tempers of our ordinary life. So that Chriftianity is so far from leaving us to live in the common ways of life, conforming to the folly of customs, and gratifying the passions and tempers which the spirit of the world delights in, it is so far from indulging us in any of these things, that all its virtues which it makes necessary to salvation, are only so many ways of living above, and contrary to the world in all the common actions of our life. If our common life is not a common course of humility, self-denial, renunciation of the world, poverty of spirit, and heavenly affection, we do not live the lives of Christians.

But yet though it is thus plain, that this and this alone is Christianity, an uniform, open, and visible practice of all these virtues; yet it is as plain, that there is little or nothing of this to be found, even amongst the better fort of people. You fee them often at church, and pleafed with fine preachers; but look into their lives, and you fee them just the same fort of people as others are, that make no pretences to devotion. The difference that you find betwixt them, is only the difference of their natural tempers. They have the fame tafte of the world, the fame worldly cares, and fears, and joys; they have the fame turn of mind, equally vain in their defires. You fee the same fondness for state and equipage, the same pride and vanity of drefs, the fame felf-love and indulgence, the fame foolish friendships and groundless hatreds, the same levity of mind and trifling spirit, the same fondness for diversions, the same idle dispositions and vain ways of fpending their time in vifiting and converfation, as, the rest of the world, that make no pretences to devotion.

I do not mean this comparison betwixt people seemingly good and professed rakes, but betwixt people of sober lives. Let us take an instance in two modest women: let it be supposed, that one of them is careful of times of devotion, and observes them through a sense of duty, and that the other has no hearty concern about it, but is at church feldom or often, just as it happens. Now it is a very eafy thing to fee this difference betwixt these persons. But when you have seen this, can you find any farther difference betwixt them? Can you find that their common life is of a different kind? Are not the tempers, and customs, and manners of the one, of the fame kind as of the other? Do they live as if they belonged to different worlds, had different views in their heads, and different rules and measures of all their actions? Have they not the fame goods and evils, are they not pleafed and displeased in the same manner, and for the fame things? Do they not live in the fame course of life? Does one feem to be of this world, looking at the things that are temporal, and the other to be of another world, looking wholly at the things that are eternal? Does the one live in pleafure, delighting herfelf in fhew or drefs, and the other live in felf-denial and mortification, renouncing every thing that looks like vanity either of person, dress, or carriage? Does the one follow public diversions, and trifle away her time in idle visits and corrupt conversation; and does the other study all the arts of improving her time, living in prayer and watching, and fuch good works as may make all her time turn to her advantage, and be placed to her account at the last day? Is the one careless of expence, and glad to be able to adorn herfelf with every coftly ornament of drefs? and does the other confider her fortune as a talent given her by God, which is to be improved religiously, and no more to be fpent in vain and needless ornaments, than it is to be buried in the earth?

B 2 but

Where must you look to find one person of religion differing in this manner, from another that has none? And yet, if they do not differ in these things, which are here related, can it with any sense be said, the one is a good Christian and the other not?

Take another instance amongst the men. Leo has a great deal of good nature, has kept what they call good company, hates every thing that is false and base; is very generous and brave to his friends, but has concerned himself so little with religion, that he hardly knows the difference betwixt a Jew and a Christian.

Eusebius, on the other hand, has had early impressions of religion, and buys books of devotion. He can talk of all the feafts and fasts of the church, and knows the names of most men that have been eminent for piety. You never hear him swear or make a loose jest; and when he talks of religion, he talks of it, as of a matter of the last concern.

Here you fee that one person has Religion enough, according to the way of the world, to be reckoned a pious Christian, and the other is so far from all appearance of Religion, that he may fairly be reckoned a Heathen; and yet if you look into their common life, if you examine their chief and ruling tempers in the greatest articles of life, or the greatest doctrines of Christianity, you will find the least difference imaginable.

Confider them with regard to the use of the world, because there is what every body can see.

Now to have right notions and tempers with relation to this world, is as effectial to religion, as to have right notions of God. And it is as possible for a man to worfhip a Crocodile, and yet be a pious man, as to have his affections set upon this world, and yet be a good Christian.

But now, if you consider Leo and Eusebius in this refpect, you will find them exactly alike, seeking, using, and enjoying all that can be got in this world, in the same manner and for the same ends. You will find that riches, prosperity, pleasures, indulgences, state, equipage, and honour are just as much the happiness of Eusebius as they are of Leo. And yet if Christianity has not changed a man's mind and temper with relation to these things, what can we say that it has done for him?

For if the doctrines of Christianity were practifed, they would make a man as different from other people as to all worldly tempers, fenfual pleafures, and the pride of life, as a wife man is different from a natural; it would be as eafy a thing to know a Christian by his outward course of life, as it is now dissipate to find any body that lives it. For it is notorious that Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and insignities, this might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. They enjoy the world, and live every day in the fame tempers, and the fame defigns, and the same indulgences, as they did who knew not God, nor of any happiness in another life. Every body, that is capable of any reflection, must have observed, that this is generally the flate even of devout people, whether men or women. You may fee them different from other people fo far as to times and places of Prayer, but generally like the rest of the world in all the other parts of their lives. That is, adding Christian Devotion to an Heathen life: I have the authority of our Bleffed Saviour for this remark, where he fays, Take no thought, faying what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clouthed? for after all these things do the Gentiles seek. But if to be thus affected even with the necessary things of this life, thews that we are not yet of a Christian Spirit, but are like the Heathens; furely to enjoy the vanity and folly of the world as they did, to be like them in the main chief tempers of our lives, in felf-love and indulgence, in fenfual pleafures and diverfions, in the vanity of drefs, the love of fhew and greatness, or any other gaudy distinction of fortune, is a much greater fign of an Heathen temper. And confequently they who add Devotion to fuch a life, must be faid to pray as Christians, but live as Heathens.

CHAP. II.

An Enquiry into the Reason, why the generality of Christians fail so far short of the Holiness and Devotion of Christianity.

T may now be reasonably enquired, how it comes to pass, that the lives even of the better fort of people are thus strangely contrary to the principles of Christianity.

But before I give a direct answer to this, I desire it may riso be enquired, how it comes to pass that swearing is so common a vice amongst Christians; It is indeed not yet so common amongst women, as it is amongst men. But amongst men this sin is so common, that perhaps there are more than two in three that are guilty of it arrough the whole course of their lives, swearing more or less, just as it happens, some constantly, others only now and then, as it were by chance. Now I ask how comes it that two in three of the men are guilty of so gross and prophane a sin as this? There is neither ignorance nor human infirmity to plead for it: It is against an express commandment, and the most plain Doctrine of our blessed Saviour.

Do but now find the reason why the generality of men live in this notorious vice, and then you will have found the reason why the generality even of the better fort of people live fo contrary to Christianity.

Now the reason of common swearing is this: It is because men have not so much as the intention to please God in all their actions. For let a man but have so much piety as to intend to please God in all the actions of his life, as the happiest and best thing in the world, and then he will never swear more. It will be as impossible for him to swear, whilst he feels this intention within himself, as it is impossible for a man that intends to please his Prince, to go up and abuse him to his face.

It feems but a fmall and necessary part of piety to have fuch a fincere intention as this; and that he has no reason to look upon himself as a Disciple of Christ, who is not thus far advanced in piety. And yet it is purely for want of this degree of piety, that you fee fuch a mixture of fin and folly in the lives even of the better fort of people. It is for want of this intention that you fee men that profess religion, yet live in swearing and fenfuality; that you fee Clergymen given to pride and covetousness, and worldly enjoyments. It is for want of this intention, that you fee women that profess Devotion, yet living in all the folly and vanity of drefs, wasting their time in idleness and pleasure, and in all fuch instances of state and equipage as their estates will reach. For let but a woman feel her heart full of this intention, and fhe will find it as impossible to patch or paint, as to curle or fwear; fhe will no more defire to thine at Balls and Affemblies, or make a figure amongst those that are most finely dressed, than she will desire to dance upon a Rope to please Spectators: She will know that the one is as far from the wisdom and excellency of the Christian Spirit, as the other.

It was this general intention that made the primitive Christians such eminent instances of piety, that made the goodly fellowship of the Saints, and all the glorious army of martyrs and confessors. And if you will here thop and ask yourself why you are not as pious as the primitive Christians were, your own heart will tell you that it is neither through ignorance nor inability, but purely because you never thoroughly intended it. You observe the same Sunday-worship that they did; and you are strict in it, because it is your full intention to be fo. And when you as fully intend to be like them in their ordinary common life, when you intend to pleafe God in all your actions, you will find it as possible as to be strictly exact in the fervice of the Church. when you have this intention to pleafe God in all your actions, as the happiett and best things in the world, you will find in you as great an aversion to every thing that is vain and impertinent in common life, whether of bufiness or pleasure, as you now have to any thing that is Prophane. You will be as fearful of living in any foolish way, either of spending your time or your fortune, as you are now fearful of neglecting the public Worthip.

Now who that wants this general fincere intention, can be reckoned a Christian? And yet if it was amongst Christians, it would change the whole face of the world; true piety and exemplary holiness would be as common and visible as buying and felling, or any trade

Let a Clergyman be but thus pious, and he will converse as if he had been brought up by an Apostle; he will no more think and talk of noble preferment, than of noble cating or a glorious chariot. He will no more complain of the frowns of the world, or a small cure, or the want of a patron, than he will complain of the want of a laced coat, or a running horse. Let him but intend to please God in all his actions, as the happiest and best thing in the world, and then he will know that there is nothing nothing noble in a Clergyman, but burning zeal for the falvation of fouls; nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and a worldly Spirit.

Again, let a Tradefman have this intention, and it will make him a faint in his fhop; his every day business will be a course of wife and reasonable actions, made holy to God, by being done in obedience to his will and pleafure. He will buy and fell, and labour and travel, because by so doing he can do some good to himself and others. But then, as nothing can please God but what is wife, and reasonable, and holy, so he will neither buy, nor fell, nor labour in any other manner, nor to any other end, but fuch as may be flewn to be wife and reafonable and holy. He will therefore confider not what arts, or methods, or application, will foonest make him richer and greater than his brethren, or remove him from a shop to a life of state and pleasure; but he will consider what arts, what methods, what application can make worldly bufiness most acceptable to God, and make a life of trade a life of holiness, devotion, and piety. This will be the temper and spirit of every tradesman; he cannot stop short of these degrees of piety, whenever it is his intention to please God in all his actions, as the best and happiest thing in the world.

And on the other hand, whoever is not of this spirit and temper in his trade and profession, and does not carry it on only so far as is best subservient to a wife and holy and heavenly life; it is certain that he has not this intention; and yet without it, who can be shewn to be a follower of Jefus Christ?

Again, let the Gentlemen of birth and fortune but have this intention, and you will fee how it will carry him from every appearance of evil, to every instance of piety and goodness.

He cannot live by chance, or as humour and fancy carries him, because he knows that nothing can please God but a wife and regular course of life. He cannot live in idleness and indulgence, in sports and gaming, in pleasures and intemperance, in vain expences and high living; because these things cannot be turned into means of piety and holiness, or made so many parts of a wife and religious life,

B 5 As

As he thus removes from all appearance of evil, fo he haftens and afpires after every instance of goodness. He does not ask what is allowable and pardonable, but what is commendable and praise-worthy. He does not ask whether God will forgive the folly of our lives, the madness of our pleasures, the vanity of our expences, the richness of our equipage, and the careless confumption of our time; but he asks whether God is pleased with these things, or whether these are the appointed ways of gaining his favour. He does not enquire whether it be pardonable to hoard up money to adorn ourfelves with diamonds, and gild our chariots, whilft the widow and the orphan, the fick and the prisoner want to be relieved; but he asks whether God has required these things at our hands, whether we shall be called to account at the last day for the neglect of them, because it is not his intent to live in fuch ways as, for ought we know, God may perhaps pardon; but to be diligent in fuch ways, as we know that God will infallibly reward.

He will not therefore look at the lives of Christians, to learn how he cught to spend his estate; but he will look into the Scriptures, and make every doctrine, parable, precept, or instruction that relates to rich men, a law to himself in the use of his estate.

He will have nothing to do with costly apparel, because the rich man in the Gospel was cloathed with purple and fine linen. He denies himself the pleasures and indulgences which his estate could procure, because our Blessed Saviour saith, Wo unto you that are rich, for ye have received your consolation. He will have but one rule for charity, and that will be, to spend all that he can that way; because the judge of quick and dead hath said, that all is so given, is given to him.

He will have no hospitable table for the rich and wealthy to come and feast with him in good eating and drinking; because our Blessed Lord saith, When thou makest a dinner, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours, lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shall be blessed. For they cannot recompense thee,

Luke xiv. 12, 13, 14.

He will waste no money in gilded roofs or costly furniture: He will not be carried from pleasure to pleasure in expensive state and equipage, because an inspired Apostle hath said, that all that is in the world, the lust of the slesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

Let not any one look upon this as an imaginary de fcription of charity, that looks fine in the notion, but cannot be put in practice. For it is so far from being an imaginary impracticable form of life, that it has been practifed by great numbers of Christians in former ages, who were glad to turn their whole estates into a constant course of charity. And it is so far from being impossible now, that if we can find any Christians, that sincerely intend to please God in all their actions as the best and happiest thing in the world, whether they be young or old, single or married, men or women, if they have but this intention, it will be impossible for them to do otherwise. This one principle will infallibly carry them to this height of charity, and they will find themselves unable to stop short of it.

For how is it possible for a man that intends to please God in the use of his money, and intends it because he judges it to be his greatest happiness, how is it possible for such a one in such a state of mind, to bury his money in needless impertinent finery, in covering himself or his horses with gold, whilst there are any works of piety and charity to be done with it, or any ways of fpending it well?

This is as strictly impossible as for a man that intends to please God in his words, to go into company on purpose to swear and lie. For as all waste and unreasonable expence is done designedly and with deliberation, so no one can be guilty of it, whose constant intention is to please God in the use of his money.

I have chose to explain this matter by appealing to this intention, because it makes the case so plain, and because every one that has a mind, may see it in the clearest light and seel it in the strongest manner, only by looking into his own heart. For it is as easy for every person to know, whether he intends to please God in all his actions; as for any servant to know whether this be his intention towards his master. Every one also can as easily tell how he lays out his money, and whether he considers how to please God in it, as he can tell where his estate is, and whether it be in money or land. So that here is no plea left for ignorance or frailty, as to this matter, every body is in the light, and every body has power. And no one can fall, but he that is not so much a Christian as to intend to please God in the use of his estate.

You fee two persons, one is regular in public and private Prayer, the other is not. Now the reason of this difference is not this, that one has strength and power to observe Prayer, and the other has not; but the reafon is this, that one intends to pleafe God in the duties of Devotion, and the other has no intention about it. Now the case is the same in the right or wrong use of our time and money. You fee one person throwing away his time in fleep and idleness, in visiting and diverfions, and his money in the most vain and unreasonable expences. You fee another careful of every day, dividing his hours by rules of Reason and Religion, and fpending all his money in works of charity; now the difference is not owing to this, that one has ftrength and power to do thus, and the other has not; but it is owing to this, that one intends to please God in the right wife of all his time and all his money, and the other has no intention about it.

Here therefore let us judge ourselves sincerely, let us not vainly content ourselves with the common disorders of our lives, the vanity of our expences, the folly of our diversions, the pride of our habits, the idleness of our lives, and the wasting of our time, fancying that these are such impersections as we fall into through the unavoidable weakness and frailty of our natures; but let us be assured, that these disorders of our common life are owing to this, that we have not so much christianity as to intend to please God in all the actions of our life, as the best and happiest thing in the world. So that we must not look upon ourselves in a state of common and pardonable impersection, but in such a state as wants the first and most fundamental principle of Christianity, viz'

an intention to pleafe God in all our actions.

And if any one was to ask himself, how it comes to pass that there are any degrees of sobriety which he neglects, any practice of humility which he wants, any methods of charity which he does not follow, any rules of redeeming time which he does not observe, his own heart will tell him, that it is because he never intended to be so exact in those duties. For whenever we fully intend it, it is as possible to conform to all this regularity of life, as it is possible for a man to observe times of prayer.

So that the fault does not lie here, that we defire to be good and perfect, but through the weakness of our nature fall flort of it; but it is because we have not piety enough to intend to be as good as we can, or to please God in all the actions of our life. This we see is plainly the case of him that spends his time in sports, when he should be at church; it is not his want of power, but his want of intention or desire to be there.

And the case is plainly the same in every other folly of human life. She that spends her time and money in the unreasonable ways and fashions of the world, does not do so, because she wants power to be wise and religious in the management of her time and money; but because she has no intention or desire of being so. When she feels this intention, she will find it as possible to act up to it, as to be strictly sober and chaste, because it is her care and desire to be so.

This doctrine does not suppose that we have no need of divine grace, or that it is our own power to make ourselves perfect. It only supposes that through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life, as by the ordinary means of grace we should have power to avoid.

And that we have not that perfection, which our prefent state of grace makes us capable of, because we do not fo much as intend to have it.

It only teaches us that the reason why you see no real mortification or self-denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no Christian meekness, no fincere zeal, no eminent piety in the common lives of Christians; is this, because they do not so much as intend to be exact and exemplary in these virtues.

CHAP. III.

Of the great Danger and Polly of not intending to be as evinent and exemplary as we can, in the Practice of all Christian Virtues.

LTHOUGH the goodness of God, and his rich mercies in Christ Jesus are a sufficient assurance to us, that he will be merciful to our unavoidable weaknesses and infirmities, that is, to such failings as are the effects of ignorance or surprize; yet we have no reason to expect the same mercy towards those sins which we have lived in, through a want of intention to avoid them.

For instance, the case of a common swearer who dies in that guilt, seems to have no title to the divine mercy; for this reason, because he can no more plead any weakness or infirmity in his excuse, than the man that hid his talent in the earth, could plead his want of strength to keep it out of the earth.

But now, if this be right reasoning, the case of a common swearer, that his sin is not to be reckoned a pardonable frailty, because he has no weakness to plead in its excuse; why then do we not carry this way of reasoning to its true extent? Why don't we as much condemn every one other error of life that has no more weakness to plead in its excuse than common swearing?

For if this be fo bad a thing, because it might be avoided, if we did but sincerely intend it, must not then all other erroneous ways of life be very guilty, if we live in them, not through weakness and inability but because we never sincerely intended to avoid them?

For inftance, you perhaps have made no progrefs in the most important christian virtues, you have scarce gone half way in humility and charity: now if your failure in these duties is purely owing to your want of intention of performing them in any true degree, have you not then as little to plead for yourself, and are you not as much without all excuse as the common swearer?

Why, therefore, don't you press these things home upon your conscience? Why do you not think it as dangerous for you to live in such desects as are in your power to amend, as it is dangerous for a common swearer to live in the breach of that duty, which it is in his power to observe? Is not negligence and a want of a sincere intention as blameable in one case as in another?

You, it may be, are as far from Christian Perfection, as the common swearer is from keeping the third Commandment; are you not therefore as much condemned by the doctrines of the Gospel, as the swearer is by the third Commandment?

You perhaps will fay, that all people fall fhort of the perfection of the gospel, and therefore you are content with your failings. But this is saying nothing to the purpose. For the question is not whether Gospel Perfection, can be fully attained; but whether you come as near it as a sincere intention, and careful diligence can carry you. Whether you are not in a much lower state than you might be, if you sincerely intended and carefully laboured to advance yourself in all Christian virtues.

If you are as forward in the Christian life as your best endeavours can make you, then you may justly hope that your imperfections will not be laid to your charge; but if your defects in piety, humility, and charity, are owing to your negligence and want of sincere attention to be as eminent as you can in these virtues, then you leave yourself as much without excuse as he that lives in the sin of swearing, through the want of a sincere intention to depart from it.

The falvation of our fouls is fet forth in Scripture as a thing of difficulty, that requires all our diligence, that is to be worked out with fear and trembling.

We are told, that firait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

That many are called but few are chosen. And that many will miss of their falvation, who seem to have taken some pains to obtain it. As in these words, Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

Here our blessed Lord commands us to strive to enter in; because many will fail, who only seek to enter. By which we are plainly taught, that religion is a state of labour and striving, and that many will fail of their salvation; not because they took no care or pains about it, but because they did not take pains and care enough; they only sought, but did not strive to enter in.

Every Christian, therefore, should as well examine his life by these Doctrines, as by the commandments. For these Doctrines are as plain marks of our condition, as the commandments are plain marks of our duty.

For if falvation is only given to those who strive for it, then it is as reasonable for me to consider whether my course of life be a course of striving to obtain it, as to consider whether I am keeping any of the Commandments.

If my Religion is only a formal compliance with those modes of worthip that are in fashion where I live; if it costs me no pains or trouble, if it lays me under no rules and restraints, if I have no careful thoughts and sober restections about it, is it not great weakness to think that I am striving to enter in at the strait gate.

If I am feeking every thing that can delight my fenfes and regale my appetites; fpending my time and fortune in pleafures, in diversions, and worldly enjoyments, a stranger to watchings, fastings, prayers, and mortifications, how can it be faid that I am working out my substantial fluctuation with fear and trembling?

If there is nothing in my life and convertation that flow me to be different from the Jews and Heathens; if I use the world, and worldly enjoyments, as the generality of people now do, and in all ages have done, why should I think that I am amongst those few, who are walking in the narrow way to Heaven?

And yet if the way is narrow, if none can walk in it but those that strive, is it not as necessary for me to consider whether the way I am in be narrow enough; or the labour I take be a fufficient striving, as to consider whether I sufficiently observe the second or third Commandment?

The fum of this matter is this: From the above-mentioned, and many other passages of Scripture, it seems plain, that our salvation depends upon the sincerity and persection of our endeavours to obtain it.

Weak and imperfect men shall, notwithstanding their frailties and desects, be received, as having pleased God, if they have done their utmost to please him.

The rewards of charity, piety, and humility, will be given to those whose lives have been a careful labour to exercise these virtues in as high a degree as they could.

We cannot offer to God the fervice of angels; we cannot obey him as man in a state of perfection could; but fallen men can do their best, and this is the perfection that is required of us; it is only the perfection of our best endeavours, a careful labour to be as perfect as we can.

But if we stop short of this, for ought we know, we stop short of the mercy of God, and leave ourselves nothing to plead from the terms of the Gospel. For God has there made no premises of mercy to the slothful and negligent. His mercy is only offered to our frail and imperfect, but best endeavours to practice all manner of righteousness.

As the law to angels is angelical righteoufness, as the law to perfect beings is strict perfection, so the law to our imperfect natures is the best obedience that our frail nature is able to perform.

The measure of our love to God seems in justice to be the measure of our love of every virtue. We are to love and practise it with all our heart, with all our foul, with all our mind, and with all our strength. And when we cease to live with this regard to virtue, we live below our nature, and instead of being able to plead our instruction, we stand chargeable with negligence.

It is for this reason that we are exhorted to work out our salvation with fear and trembling; because unless our heart and passions are eagerly bent upon the work of our salvation; unless holy fears animate our endeavours, and keep our confciences strict and tender about every part of our duty, constantly examining how we live, and how fit we are to die: we shall in all probability sall into a state of negligence, and sit down in such a course of life as will never carry us to the rewards of heaven.

And he that confiders that a just God can only make fuch allowances as are suitable to his justice, that our works are all to be examined by fire, will find that sear and trembling are proper tempers for those that are drawing near fo great a trial.

And indeed there is no probability that any one should do all the duty that is expected from him, or make that progress in piety which the holiness and justice of God requires of him; but he that is constantly afraid of falling short of it.

Now this is not intended to possess people's minds with a scrupulous anxiety, and discontent in the service of God, but to fill them with a just fear of living in sloth and idleness, and in the neglect of such virtues as they will want at the day of judgment.

It is to excite them to an earnest examination of their lives, to such zeal, and care, and concern after christian perfection, as they use in any matter that has gained their heart and affections.

It is only defiring them to be fo apprehensive of their state, so humble in the opinion of themselves, so earnest after higher degrees of piety, and so fearful of falling short of happiness, as the great apostle St Paul was, when he thus wrote to the Philippians.

"Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect.—but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before: I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." And then he adds, "let us therefore, as many as are perfect, be thus minded."

But now, if the apostle thought it necessary for those, who were in his state of perfection, to be thus minded; that is, thus labouring, pressing and aspiring after some degrees of holiness, to which they were not then arrived; surely it is much more necessary for us, who are born in the dregs of time, and labouring under great imperfections, to be thus minded; that is, thus earnest and striving after such degrees of a holy and divine life, as we have not yet attained.

The best way for any one to know how much he ought to aspire after holiness, is to consider not how much will make his present life easy; but to ask himfelf how much he thinks will make him easy at the hone of death.

Now any man that dares be ferious as to put this question to himself will be forced to answer that at death every one will wish that he had been as perfect as human nature can be.

Is not this therefore fufficient to put us not only upon wishing, but labouring after all that perfection which we shall then lament the want of? Is it not excessive folly to be content with such a course of piety when we shall so want it, as to have nothing else to comfort us? How can we carry a severer condemnation against ourselves, than to believe that at the hour of death we shall want the virtues of the saints, and wish that we had been amongst the first servants of God, and yet take no methods of arriving at their height of piety, whilst we are alive?

Though this is an abfurdity that we can eafily pass over at present, whilst the health of our bodies, the passions of our minds, the noise, and hurry, and pleasures, and business of the world, lead us on with eyes that see not, and ears that hear not; yet at death, it will set itself before us in a dreadful magnitude, it will haunt us like a dismal ghost, and our conscience will never let us take our eyes from it.

We fee in worldly matters, what a torment felf-condemnation is; and how hardly a man is able to for-give himfelf, when he has brought himfelf into any calamity or diffrace, purely by his own folly. The affliction is made doubly tormenting; because he is forced to charge it all upon himfelf, as his own act and deed, against the nature and reason of things, and contrary to the advice of all his friends.

Now by this we may in some degree guess how terrible the pain of that self-condemnation will be, when a man shall find himself in the miseries of death, under the severity of a self-condemning conscience; charging all his distress upon his own folly and madness, against the sense and reason of his own mind, against all the doctrines and precepts of religion, and contrary to all the instructions, calls and warnings both of God and man.

Penitens was a bufy notable tradefman, and very prosperous in his dealings; but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age.

A little before his death, when the doctors had given him over, some of his neighbours came one evening to fee him; at which time, he spake thus to them:

"I fee, fays he, my friends, the tender concern you have for me, by the grief that appears in your countenances, and I know the thoughts that you now have about me. You think how melancholy a cafe it is to fee fo young a man, and in fuch flourishing business, delivered up to death. And perhaps, had I visited any of you in my condition, I should have had the same thoughts of you.

But now, my friends, my thoughts are no more like your thoughts, than my condition is like yours.

It is no trouble to me now to think that I am to die young, or before I have raifed an estate.

These things are now sunk into such mere nothings, that I have no name little enough to call them by. For if in a few days, or hours, I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace, can any words sufficiently express the littleness of every thing else?

Is there any dream like the dream of life, which amuses us with the neglect and difregard of these things? Is there any folly like the folly of our manly state, which is too wife and busy to be at leifure for these reflections?

When we confider death as a mifery, we only think of it as a miferable separation from the enjoyments of this life. We seldom mourn over an old man that dies rich; but we lament the young, that are taken away in the progress of their fortune. You yourselves look upon me with pity, not that I am going unprepared to meet the Judge of quick and dead; but that I am to leave a prosperous trade in the slower of my life.

This is the wifdom of our manly thoughts. And yet what folly of the filliest children is so great as this?

For what is there miferable or dreadful in death, but the confequences of it? When a man is dead, what does any thing fignify to him, but the state he is then in?

Our poor friend Lepidus died, you know, as he was dreffing himfelf for a feaft; do you think it is now part of his trouble that he did not live till that entertainment was over? Feafts, and bufinefs, and pleafures, and enjoyments, feem great things to us, whilit we think of nothing elfe; but as foon as we add death to them, they all fink into an equal littlenefs; and the foul that is feparated from the body, no more laments the lofs of bufinefs than the lofing of a feaft.

If I am going into the joys of God, could there be any reason to grieve, that this happened to me before I was forty years of age? Could it be a fad thing to go to heaven before I had made a few more bargains, or flood a little longer behind a counter?

And if I am to go amongst lost spirits, could there be any reason to be content, that this did not happen to me till I was old and full of riches?

If good angels were ready to receive my foul, could it be any grief to me, that I was dying upon a poor bed in a garret?

And if God has delivered me up to evil fpirits, to be dragged by them to places of torments, could it be any comfort to me, that they found me upon a bed of state?

When you are as near death as I am, you will know that all the different flates of life, whether of youth or age, riches or poverty, greatness or meanness signify no more to you, than whether you die in a poor or stately apartment?

The greatness of those things which follow death, makes all that goes before it fink into nothing.

Now that judgment is the next thing that I look for, and everlasting happiness or misery is come so near me, all the enjoyments and prosperities of life seem as vain and infignificant, and to have no more to do with my happiness, than the cleaths that I wore before

I could fpeak.

But, my friends, how am I furprized that I have not always had these thoughts? for what is there in the terrors of death, in the vanitics of life, or the necessities of picty, but what I might have as easily and fully seen in any part of my life?

What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things that are coming so fast upon us!

Just as you came into my chamber, I was thinking with myfelf, what numbers of fouls there are now in the world, in my condition at this very time, furprized with a fummons to the other world: fome taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleafures, these at fuits at law, those at gaming-tables, some on the road, others at their own fire-fides, and all feized at an hour when they thought nothing of it: frighted at the approach of death, confounded at the vanity of all their labours, defigns, and projects, aftonished at the folly of their past lives, and not knowing which way to turn their thoughts, to find any comfort. Their coniciences flying in their faces, bringing all their fins to their remembrance, tormenting them with deepest convictions of their own folly, prefenting them with the fight of the angry judge, the worm that never dies, the fire that is never quenched, the gates of hell, the powers of darkness, and the bitter pains of eternal death.

Oh my friends! blefs God that you are not of this number, that you have time and strength to employ yourselves in such works of piety as may bring you peace at the last.

And take this along with you, that there is nothing but a life of great piety, or a death of great stupidity, that can keep off these apprehensions.

Had I now a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present unto God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before so much as intended.

You perhaps, when you confider that I have lived free from fcandal and debauchery, and in the communion of condemnation at the approach of death.

But alas! what a poor thing is it, to have lived only free from murder, theft and adultery, which is all that I can fay of myfelf.

You know indeed, that I have never been reckoned a fot, but you are at the fame time witnesses, and have been frequent companions of my intemperance, fenfuali-ty, and great indulgence.

And if I am now going to a judgment, where nothing will be rewarded but good works, I may well be concerned, that though I am no fot, yet I have no christian fo-briety to plead for me.

It is true, I have lived in the communion of the church, and generally frequented its worship and fervice on Sundays, when I was neither too idle, or not otherwise disposed of by my business and pleasures. But then, my conformity to the public worship has been rather a thing of course, than any real intention of doing that, which the service of the church supposes; had it not been so, I had been oftner at church, more devout when there, and more fearful of ever neglecting it.

But the thing that now furprizes me above all wonders, is this, that I never had so much as a general intention of living up to the piety of the gospel. This never so much as entered into my head or my heart. I never once in my life considered whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour.

And can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending in any serious and deliberate manner either to know them or keep them? Can it be thought that I have pleafed God with such a life as he requires, though I have lived without ever considering what he requires, or how much I have performed? how easy a thing would salvation be, if it could fall into my careless hands, who have never had so much serious thoughts about it, as about any one common bargain that I have made?

In the business of life I have used prudence and reflection, I have done every thing by rules and methods. I have been glad to converse with men of experience and judgment, to find out the reasons why some fail and others succeed in any business. I have taken no step in trade but with great care and caution, considering every advantage or danger that attended it. I have always had my eye upon the main end of business, and have studied all the ways and means of being a gainer by all that I undertook.

But what is the reason that I have brought none of these tempers to religion? What is the reason that I, who have so often talked of the necessity of rules and methods, and diligence in worldly business, have all this while never once thought of any rules, or methods, or managements, to carry me on in a life of piety?

Do you think any thing can aftonish and confound a dying man like this? What pain do you think a man must feel, when his conscience lays all this folly to his charge, when it shall shew him how regular, exact, and wise he has been in small matters, that are passed away like a dream, and how it upid and senseles he has lived, without any reflection, without any rules, in things of such eternal moment, as no heart can sufficiently conceive them!

Had I only my frailties and imperfections to lament at this time, I should lie here humbly trusting in the mercies of God. But alas! how can I call a general difregard, and a thorough neglect of all religious improvement, a frailty and imperfection; when it was as much in my power to have been exact, and careful, and diligent in a course of piety, as in the business of my trade.

I could have called in as many helps, have practifed as many rules, and been taught as many certain methods of holy living, as of thriving in my shop, had I but so intended and desired it.

Oh! my friends! a careless life, unconcerned and unattentive to the duties of religion, is so without all excuse so unworthy of the mercy of God, such a shame to the fense and reason of our minds, that I can hardly conceive a greater punishment, than for a man to be thrown into the state that I am in, to reslect upon it."

Penitens was here going on, but had his mouth stop

ped by a convulsion, which never suffered him to speak any more. He lay convulsed about twelve hours, and then gave up the ghost.

Now if every reader would imagine this Penitens to have been fome particular acquaintance or relation of his, and fancy that he faw and heard all that is here defcribed, that he ftood by his bed-fide when his poor friend lay in fuch diftrefs and agony, lamenting the folly of his paft life, it would in all probability teach him fuch wifdom as never entered into his heart before. If to this, he fhould confider, how often he himfelf might have been furprized in the fame ftate of negligence, and made an example to the reft of the world, this double reflection, both upon the diftrefs of his friend, and the goodnefs of that God, who had preferved him from it, would in all likelihood foften his heart into holy tempers, and make him turn the remainder of his life into a regular course of piety.

This therefore being fo useful a meditation, I shall here leave the reader, as, I hope, seriously engaged in žt.

CHAP. IV.

We can please God in no state or employment of Life, but by intending and devoting it all to his Honour and Glory.

AVING in the first Chapter stated the general nature of devotion, and shewn, that it implies not any form of prayer, but a certain form of life that is offered to God not at any particular times or places, but every where and in every thing; I shall now descend to some particulars, and shew how we are to devote our labour and employment, our time and fortunes unto God.

As a good Christian should consider every place as holy, because God is there: so he should look upon every part of his life as a matter of holiness, because it is to be offered unto God.

The profession of a clergyman is an hely profession, because because it is a ministration in holy things, an attendance at the altar. But worldly business is to be made holy unto the Lord, by being done as a service to him, and in conformity to his divine will.

For as all men and all things in the world, as truly belong unto God, as any places, things, or persons that are devoted to divine service; so all things are to be used, and all persons are to act in their several states and employments for the glory of God.

Men of worldly business therefore must not look upon themselves as at liberty to live to themselves, to facrifice to their own humours and tempers, because their employment is of a worldly nature. But they must consider, that as the world and all worldly professions, as truly belong to God, as persons and things that are devoted to the altar; so it is as much the duty of men in worldly business to live wholly unto God, as it is the duty of those who are devoted to divine service.

As the whole world is God's, fo the whole world is to act for God. As all men have the fame relation to God, as all men have all their powers and faculties from God; fo all men are obliged to act for God with all their powers and faculties.

As all things are God's, fo all things are to be used and regarded as the things of God. For men to abuse things on earth, and live to themselves, is the same rebellion against God, as for angels to abuse things in heaven; because God is just the same Lord of all on earth, as he is the Lord of all in heaven.

Things may, and must differ in their use, but yet they are all to be used according to the will of God.

Men may, and must differ in their employment, but yet they must all act for the same ends, as dutiful servants of Ged, in the right and pious performance of their several callings.

Clergymen must live wholly unto God in one particular way, that is, in the exercise of holy offices, in the ministration of prayers and facraments, and a zealous distribution of spiritual goods.

But men of other employments are in their particular ways as much obliged to act as the fervants of God, and liv wholly unto him in their feveral callings.

This

people of other callings.

When it can be shewn that men might be vain, covetous, fenfual, worldly-minded, or proud in the exercise of their worldly bufiness, then it will be allowable for clergymen to indulge the fame tempers in their facred profession. For though these tempers are most odious and most criminal in clergymen, who, besides their baptifmal vow, have a fecond time devoted themselves to God, to be his fervants, not in the common offices of human life, but in the spiritual service of the most holy facred things: and who are therefore to keep themselves as separate and different from the common life of other men, as a church or an altar is to be kept feparate from houses and tables of common use: Yet as all Christians are by their baptism devoted to God, and made profesfors of holiness, so are they all in their several callings to live as holy and heavenly perfons; doing every thing in their common life only in fuch a manner, as it may be received by God, as a fervice done to him. For things spiritual and temporal, facred and common, must, like men and angels, like heaven and earth, all conspire in the glory of God.

As there is but one God and Father of us all, whose glory gives light and life to every thing that lives; whose presence fills all places, whose power supports all beings, whose providence ruleth all events; so every thing that lives, whether in heaven or earth, whether they be thrones or principalities, men or angels, they must all with one spirit, live wholly to the praise and glory of this one God and Father of them all. Angels as angels in their heavenly ministrations, but men as men, women as women, bishops as bishops, priests as priests, and deacons as deacons; some with things spiritual, and some with things temporal, offering to God the daily facrifice of a reasonable life, wise actions, purity of heart, and hea-

This is the common business of all persons in this world. It is not left to any woman in the world to trisle away their time in the sollies and impertinences of a sashionable life, nor to any men to resign themselves up to worldly cares and concerns; it is not left to the rich to gratify their passions in the indulgencies and pride of life; nor to the poor to vex and torment their hearts with the poverty of their state; but men and women, rich and poor, must with bishops and priests, walk before God in the same wife and holy spirit, in the same denial of all vain tempers, and in the fame discipline and care of their fouls; not only because they have all the fame rational nature, and are fervants of the fame God, but because they all want the same holiness to make them fit for the same happiness, to which they are called. It is therefore absolutely necessary for all Christians, whether men or women, to confider themselves as perfons that are devoted to holiness; and so order their common ways of life by fuch rules of reason and piety, as may turn it into continual fervice unto almighty God.

Now to make our labour or employment an acceptable fervice unto God, we must carry it on with the same spirit, and temper, that is required in giving of alms, or any work of piety. For, if whether we

1 Cor. x. 31. eat or drink, or whatsever we do, we must do all to the glory of God; If we are to use this world as if we used it not; if we are to present our bodies a living facrifice, holy, acceptable

Rom. xii. 7. to God; if we are to live by faith, and not by fight, and to have our conversation in beaven; then it is necessary, that the common way of our life in every state, be made to glorify God by such tempers as make our prayers and adorations acceptable to him. For, if we are worldly or earthly-minded in our employments, if they are carried on with vain defires, and covetous tempers, only to satisfy ourselves, we can no more be said to live to the glory of God, than gluttons and drunkards can be said to eat and drink to the glory of God.

As the glory of God is one and the fame thing, fo whatever we do fuitable to it, must be done with one and the same spirit. That same state and temper of mind which makes our alms and devotions acceptable, must also make our labour, or employment, a proper offering unto God. If a man labours to be rich, and pursues his business, that he may raise himself to a state of

figure and glory in the world, he is no longer ferving God in his employment; he is acting under other mafters, and has no more title to a reward from God, than he that gives alms, that he may be feen, or prays that he may be heard of men. For vain and earthly defires are no more allowable in our employments, than in our alms and devotions. For these tempers of worldly pride and vain glory, are not only evil, when they mix with our good works, but they have the fame evil nature, and make us odious to God, when they enter into the common business of our employment. If it were allowable to indulge covetous or vain passions in our worldly employments, it would then be allowable to be vain-glorious in our devotions. But as our alms and devotions are not an acceptable fervice, but when they proceed from a heart truly devoted to God, fo our common employment cannot be reckoned a fervice to him, but when it is performed with the same temper and piety of heart.

Most of the employments of life are in their own nature lawful; and all those that are so, may be made a fubstantial part of our duty to God, if we engage in them only fo far, and for fuch ends, as are fultable to beings, that are to live above the world, all the time that they live in the world. This is the only meafure of our application to any worldly bufiness, let it be what it will, where it will, it must have no more of our hands, our hearts, or our time, than is confiftent with an hearty, daily, careful preparation of ourselves for another life. For as all christians, as such, have renounced this world, to prepare themselves by daily devotion and universal holmers, for an eternal state of quite another nature, they must look upon worldly employments, as upon worldly wants and bodily infirmities; things not to be defired, but only to be endured and fuffered, till death and the refurrection has carried us to an eternal state of real happiness.

Now he that does not look at the things of this life in this degree of littleness, cannot be said extrement to feel or believe the greatest truths of christianity. For if he thinks any thing great or important in human business, can he be said, to feel or believe those scriptures which represent this life, and the greatest things of life, as bubbles, vapours, dreams, and shadows?

If he thinks figure, and fhew, and worldly glory, to be any proper happiness of a christian, how can he be faid to feel or believe this doctrine. Bleffed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil for the son of man's sake? For furely, if there was any real happiness in figure, and shew, and worldly glory; if thefe things deferved our thoughts and care, it could not be matter of the highest joy, when we are torn from them by perfecutions and fufferings? If, therefore, a man will fo live, as to fhew, that he feels and believes the most fundamental doctrines of christianity, he must live above the world; this is the temper that must enable him to do the business of life, and yet live wholly unto God, and to go through fome worldly employment with a heavenly mind. And it is as neceffary, that people live in their employments with this temper, as it is necessary, that their employment itself be lawful.

The hufbandman that tilleth the ground is employed in an honest business, that is necessary in life, and very capable of being made an acceptable service unto God. But if he labours and toils, not to serve any reasonable ends of life, but in order to have his plow made of silver, and to have his horses harnessed in gold, the honesty of his employment is lost as to him, and his labour becomes his folly.

A tradefinan may justly think that it is agreeable to the will of God, for him to fell such things as are innocent and useful in life; such as help both himself and others to a reasonable support, and enable them to affist those that want to be assisted. But if instead of this, he trades only with regard to himself, without any other rule than that of his own temper, if it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgencies, and be able to retire from business to idleness and luxury, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency, and is so far from being an acceptable service to God, that it is only a more plausible course of covetousness, self-love, and ambition. For such a one turns the necessities necessities of employments into pride and covetousness, just as the fot and epicure turn the necessities of eating and drinking into gluttony and drunkennefs. Now he that is up early and late, that sweats and labours for these ends, that he may be some time or other rich, and live in pleafure and indulgence, lives no more to the glory of God, than he that plays and games for the fame ends. For though there is a great difference between trading and gaming, yet most of that difference is lost, when men once trade with the fame defires and tempers, and for the fame ends that others game. Charity and fine drefling are things very different; but if men give alms for the fame reasons that others dress fine, only to be feen and admired, charity is then but like the vanity of fine clothes. In like manner, if the fame motives make some people painful and industrious in their trades, which makes others constant at gaming, such pains is but like the pains of gaming.

Calidus has traded above thirty years in the greatest city of the kingdom; he has been to many years constantly increasing his trade and his fortune. Every hour of the day is with him an hour of business; and though he eats and drinks very heartily, yet every meal feenis to be in a hurry, and he would fay grace if he had time. Calidus ends every day at the tavern, but has not leiture to be there till near nine o'clock. He is always forced to drink a good hearty glafs, to drive thoughts of bufinefs out of his head, and make his spirits drowly enough for fleep. He does bufinefs all the time that he is rining, and has fettled feveral matters before he can get to his compting-room. His prayers are a short ejaculation or two, which he never miffes in ftormy tempettuous weather, because he has always something or other at Sea. Calidus will tell you with great pleasure, that he has been in this hurry for fo many years, and that it must have killed him long ago, but that it has been a rule with him, to get out of the town every Saturday, and make the Sunday a day of quiet and good refrethment in the country.

He is now fo rich, that he would leave off his business, and amuse his old age with building and furnishing a finehouse in the country, but that he is afraid he should grow melancholy if he was to quit his business. He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man, that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. If thoughts of religion happen at any time to steal into his head, Calidus contents himself with thinking that he never was a friend to hereticks and insidels, that he has always been civil to the minister of his parish, and very often given something to the charity-schools.

Now this way of life is at fuch a diffance from all the doctrine and discipline of christianity, that no one can live in it through ignorance or frailty. Calidus can no more imagine, that he is born again of St. John iii. the spirit; that he is in Christ a new creative; that he lives here as a stranger and Coloil. iii. 1. pilgrim, setting his affections upon things a tove, and laying up treasures in heaven. He can no more imagine this, than he can think that he has been all his life an apostle, working miracles and preaching the gospel.

It multalio becomed that the generality of trading people, especially in great towns, are too much like Calidus. You see them all the week buried in business, unable to think of any thing else; and then spending the Sunday in idleness and refreshment, in wandering into the country, in such visits and jovial meetings as make it often the worst day of the week.

Now they do not live thus, because they cannot support themselves with less care and application to business; but they live thus because they want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of sinery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for. Take away but this temper, and then people of all trades, will find themselves at leisure to live every day like Christians, to be careful of every duty of the gospel, to live in a visible course of religion, and be every day strict observers both of private and public prayer.

Now the only way to do this, is for people to confider their trade, as fomething that they are obliged to devote to the glory of God, fomething that they are to do only in fuch a manner, as that they may make it a duty to him. Nothing can be right in business, that is not under these rules. The apostle commands fervants, to be obedient to their masters in Ephes. vi. 5. singleness of heart as unto Christ. Not with Col. iii. 22, eye-service as men-pleasers, but as the service as men-pleasers, but as the ferwants of Christ, doing the will of Goat from the heart. With good will doing service as unto the Lord,

This paffage fufficiently snews, that all Christians are to live wholly unto God in every thate and condition, doing the work of their common calling in fuch a manner, and for fuch ends, as to make it a part of their devotion or fervice to God. For certainly if poor flaves are not to comply with their bufiness as men-pleasers, if they are to look wholly unto God in all their actions, and ferve in fingleness of heart, as unto the Lord, furely men of other employments and conditions must be as much obliged to go through their business with the same fingleness of heart; not as pleasing the vanity of their own minds, not as gratifying their own felfish, worldly passions, but as the servants of God in all that they have to do. For furely no one will fay that a flave is to devote his state of life unto God, and make the will of God, the fole rule and end of his fervice, but that a tradefman need not act with the same spirit of devotion in his builnefs. For this is as abfurd, as to make it necessary for one man to be more just or faithful than another.

It is therefore absolutely certain, that no Christian is to enter any further into business, nor for any other ends, than such as he can in singleness of heart offer unto God, as a reasonable service. For the son of God has redeemed us for this only end, that we should by a life of reason and piety live to the glory of God; this is the only rule and measure for every order and state of life. Without this rule, the most lawful employment becomes a sinful state of life.

Take away this from the life of a clergyman, and his holy profession serves only to expose him to a greater damnation. Take away this from tradesmen, and shops are but so many houses of greediness and slithy sucre Take away this from gentlemen, and the course of their life becomes a course of sensuality, pride and wantoness nefs. Take away this rule from our tables, and all falls into gluttony and drunkennefs. Take away this measure from our drefs and habits, and all is turned into such paint, and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Take away this from the use of our fortunes, and you will find people sparing in nothing but charity. Take away this from our diversions, and you will find no sports too silly, nor any entertainments too vain and corrupt to be the pleasure of christians.

If therefore we defire to live unto God, it is necessary to bring our whole life under this law, to make his glory the fole rule and measure of our acting in every employment of life. For there is no other true devotion, but this of living devoted to God in the common business of our lives.

So that men must not content themselves with the lawfulness of their employments, but must consider whether they use them as they are to use every thing, as strangers and pilgrims, that are baptized into the resurrection of Jesus Christ, that are to follow him in a wise and heavenly course of life, in the mortification of all worldly desires, and in puriying and preparing their souls for the bleffed enjoyment of God.

For to be vain, or proud, or covetous, or ambitious in the common course of our business, is as contrary to these holy tempers of Christianity, as cheating and dis-

If a glutton was to fay in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. For as a Christian is not only required to be honest, but to be of a Christian spirit, and make his life an exercise of humility, repentance and heavenly affection, so all tempers that are contrary to these, are as contrary to Christianity, as cheating is contrary to honesty.

So that the matter plainly comes to this; all irregular tempers in trade and business, are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking.

Proud views and vain defires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrify in prayer, or vanity in alms. And there can be no reason given why vanity in our alms flould make us odious to God, but what will prove any other kind of pride to be equally odious. He that labours and toils in a calling, that he makes a figure in the world, and draw the eyes of people upon the splendour of his condition, is as far from the pious humility of a christian, as he that gives alms that he may be feen of men. For the reason why pride, and vanity in our prayers and alms renders them an unacceptable fervice to God, is not because there is any thing particular in prayers and alms, that cannot allow of pride, but because pride is in no respect, nor in any thing made for man; it destroys the piety of our prayers and alms, because it destroys the piety of every thing that it touches, and renders every action that it governs, incapable of being offered unto God.

So that if we could fo divide ourselves, as to be humble in some respects, and proud in others, such humility would be of no service to us, because God requires us as truly to be humble in all our actions and designs, as to be true and honest in all our actions and designs.

And as a man is not honest and true, because he is not to a great many people, or upon several occasions, but because truth and honesty is the measure of all his dealings with every body; so the case is the same in humility, or any other temper, it must be the general ruling habit of our minds and extend itself to all our actions and defigns, before it can be imputed to us.

We indeed sometimes talk, as if a man might be humble in some things and proud in others, humble in his dress, but proud of his learning, humble in his person, but proud in his views and designs. But though this may pass in common discourse, where few things are said according to strict truth, it cannot be allowed when we examine into the nature of our actions.

It is very possible for a man that lives by cheating, to be very punctual in paying for what he buys; but then every one is assured, that he does not do so, out of any principal of true honesty.

In like manner it is very possible for a man that is proud proud of his estate, ambitious in his views, or vain of his learning, to difregard his dress, and person, in such a manuer as a truly humble man would do; but to suppose that he does so out of a true principle of religious humility, is full as absurd, as to suppose that a cheat pays for what he buys, out of a principle of religious honestv.

As therefore all kinds of dishonesty destroy our pretences to an honest principle of mind, fo all kinds of pride destroy our pretences to an humble spirit.

No one wonders, that those prayers and alms, which proceed from pride and oftentation are odious to God; but yet it is as easy to shew, that pride is as pardonable there, as any where elfe.

If we we could suppose that God rejects pride in our prayers and alms, but bears with pride in our dress, our persons, or estates, it would be the same thing as to suppose that God condemns salsehood in some actions, but allows it in others. For pride in one thing differs from pride in another thing, as the robbing of one man difters from the robbing of another.

Again, if pride and oftentation, is so odious that it destroys the merit and worth of the most reasonable actions, surely it must be equally odious in those actions, which are only founded in the weakness and infirmity of our nature. As thus, alms are commanded by God, as excellent in themselves, as true instances of divine temper, but clothes are only allowed to cover our shame; therefore it must at least be as odious a degree of pride, to be vain in our clothes, as to be vain in our alms.

Again, we are commanded to pray without ceasing, as a means of rendering our fouls more exalted and divine, but we are forbidden to lay up treasures upon earth; and can we think that it is not as bad to be vain of those treasures which we are forbidden to lay up, as to be vain of those prayers which we are commanded to make.

Women are required to have their heads covered, and to adorn themselves with shamefacedness; if therefore 1Cor. xi.13. they are vain in those things which are expressly forbidden, if they patch and paint paint that part, which can only be adorned by shamefacedness, surely they 1 Tim. ii. 9. have as much to repent of for such a pride, as they have, whose pride is the motive to their prayers and charity. This must be granted, unless we will say, that it is more pardonable to glory in our shame, than to glory in our virtue.

All these instances are only to shew us the great necessity of such a regular and uniform piety, as extends itself to all the actions of our common life.

That we must eat and drink, and dress and discourse, according to the sobriety of the Christian spirit, engage in no employments but such as we can truly devote unto God, nor pursue them any farther than so far as conduces to the reasonable ends of a holy devout life.

That we must be honest, not only on particular occasions, and in such instances as are applauded in the world, easy to be performed and free from dauger or loss, but from such a living principle of justice, as makes us love truth and integrity in all its instances, follow it through all dangers, and against all opposition; as knowing that the more we pay for any truth, the better is our bargain, and that then our integrity becomes a pearl, when we have parted with all to keep it.

That we must be humble, not only in such instances as are expected in the world, or suitable to our tempers, or confined to particular occasions, but in such an humility of spirit, as renders us meek and lowly in the whole course of our lives, as shews itself in our dress, our perfon, our conversation, our enjoyment of the world, the tranquility of our minds, patience under injuries, submission to superiors, and condescensions to those that are below us, and in all the outward actions of our lives.

That we must devote, not only times and places to prayer, but be every where in the spirit of devotion, with hearts always set towards heaven, looking up to God in all our actions, and doing every thing as his fervants, living in the world as in a holy temple of God, and always worshipping him, though not with our lips, yet with the thankfulness of our hearts, the holiness of our actions, and the pious and charitable use of all his gifts. That we must not only send up petitions and thoughts thoughts now and then to heaven, but must go through all our worldly business with an heavenly spirit, as members of Christ's mystical body, that with new hearts, and new minds, are to turn an earthly life into a preparation for a life of greatness and glory in the kingdom of heaven.

Now the only way to arrive at this piety of spirit, is to bring all your actions to the same rule as your devotions and alms. You very well know what it is that makes the piety of your alms or devotions; now the same rules, the same regard to God, must render every thing else that you do, a fit and acceptable service unto God.

Enough, I hope, has been faid to shew you the necessity of thus introducing Religion into all the actions of your common life, and of living and acting with the same regard to God in all that you do, as in your prayers and alms.

Eating is one of the lowest actions of our lives, it is common to us with mere animals, yet we see that the piety of all ages of the world, has turned this ordinary action of an animal life, into a piety to God, by making every meal to begin and end with devotion.

We fee yet some remains of this custom in most christian families; some such little formality as shews you, that people used to call upon God at the beginning and end of their meals. But, indeed, it is now generally so performed, as to look more like a mockery on devotion, than any solemn application of the mind unto God. In one house you may perhaps see the head of the family just pulling off his hat, in another half getting up from his seat; another shall, it may be, proceed so far, as to make as if he said something; but however, these little attempts are the remains of some devotion that was formerly used at such times, and are proofs that religion has belonged to this part of common life.

But to fuch a pass are we now come, that though the custom is yet preserved, yet we can hardly bear with him that seems to perform it with any degree of seriousness, and look upon it as a sign of fanatical temper, if a man has not done it as foon as he begins.

I would not be thought to plead for the necessity of long prayers at these times; but thus much I think may be said, that if prayer is proper at these times, we ought to oblige ourselves to use such a form of words as should shew that we solemnly appeal to God for such graces and blessings as are then proper to the occasion. Otherwise the mock ceremony, instead of blessing our victuals, does but accustom us to trisle with devotion, and give us a habit of being unaffected with our prayers.

If every head of a family was, at the return of every meal, to oblige himfelf to make a folemn adoration of God, in such a decent manner as becomes a devout mind, it would be very likely to teach him, that swearing, fensuality, gluttony, and loose discourse, were very improper at those meals, which were to begin and end with devotion.

And if in these days of general corruption, this part of devotion is fallen into a mock ceremony, it must be imputed to this cause, that sensuality and intemperance have got too great a power over us, to suffer us to add any devotion to our meals. But thus much must be said, that when we are as pious as Jews and Heathens of all ages have been, we shall think it proper to pray at the beginning and end of our meals.

I have appealed to this pious custom of all ages of the world, as a proof of the reasonableness of the doctrine of this and the foregoing chapters: that is, as a proof that religion is to be the rule and measure of all the actions of ordinary life. For surely, if we are not to eat, but under such rules of devotion, it must plainly appear, that whatever else we do, must in its proper way, be done with the same regard to the glory of God, and agreeably to the principles of a devout and pious mind.

CHAP, V.

Persons that are free from the necessity of labour and em-ployments, are to consider themselves as devoted to God in a higher degree.

REAT part of the world are free from the necesfities of labour and employments, and have their time and fortunes in their own disposal.

But as no one is to live in his employment according to his own humour, or for fuch ends as pleafe his own fancy, but is to do all his business in tuch a manner, as to make it a fervice unto God; fo those who have no particular employment, are fo far from being left at greater liberty to live to themselves, to pursue their own humours, and fpend their time and fortunes as they please, that they are under greater obligations of living wholly unto God in all their actions.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things.

They are those, of whom much will be required, becaufe much is given unto them.

A flave can only live unto God in one particular way; that is, by religious patience and submission in his state of flavery.

But all ways of holy living, all inftances, and all kinds of virtue, lie open to those, who are masters of themselves, their time and their fortune.

It is as much the duty, therefore, of fuch persons to make a wife use of their liberty, to devote themselves to all kinds of virtue, to aspire after every thing that is holy and pious, to endeavour to be eminent in all good works, and to pleafe God in the highest and most perfect manner; it is as much their duty to be thus wife in the conduct of themselves, and thus extensive in their endeavours after holiness, as it is the duty of a flave to be refigned unto God in his flate of flavery.

You are no labourer, or tradefman, you are neither

merchant nor foldier; confider yourself, therefore, as placed in a state in some degree like that of good angels, who are fent into the world as ministering fpirits, for the general good of mankind, to affilt, protect, and minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.

For the more you are free from the common necesfities of men, the more you are to imitate the higher perfections of angels.

Had you, Serena, been obliged by the necessities of life, to wash cloaths for your maintenance, or to wait upon fome miftrefs, that demanded all your labour, it would then be your duty to ferve and glorify God, by fuch humility, obedience, and faithfulness, as might adorn that state of life.

It would then be recommended to your care, to improve that one talent to its greatest height. That when the time came, that mankind were to be rewarded for their labours by the great judge of quick and dead, you might be received with a well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord. St. Matth. XXV.

But as God has given you five talents, as he has placed you above the necessities of life, as he has left you in the hands of yourfelf in the happy liberty of chuling the most exalted ways of virtue, as he has enriched you with many gifts of fortune, and left you nothing to do, but to make the best use of variety of bleshings, to make the most of a short life, to study your own perfection, the honour of God, and the good of your neighbour; fo it is now your duty to imitate the greatest irrvants of God, to enquire how the most eminent faints have lived, to study all the arts and methods of perfection, and to fet no bounds to your love and graticude to the bountiful Author of fo many bleffings.

It is now your duty to turn your five talents into five more, and to confider how your time, and leifure, and health, and fortune, may be made to many happy means of purifying your own foul, improving your fellow-creatures in the ways of virtue, and of carrying you at lait to the greatest heights of eternal glory.

As you have no miltrefs to ferve, fo let your own foul be the object of your daily care and attendance. Be

forry for its impunities, its fports and imperfections, and fludy all the holy arts of restoring it to its natural and primitive purity.

Delight in its fervice, and beg of God to adorn it with every grace and perfection.

Nourish it with good works, give it peace in solitude, get it strength in prayer, make it wise with reading, enlighten it by meditation, make it tender with love, sweeten it with humility, humble it with patience, enliven it with Pfalms and Hymns, and comfort it with frequent reslections upon future glory. Keep it in the presence of God, and teach it to imitate those guardian angels, which, though they attend no human affairs, and the lowest of mankind, yet always behold the face of our Father which is in heaven. St Mat. xviii. 10.

This, Serena, is your profession. For as sure as God is one God, so fure it is, that he has but one command to all mankind, whether they be bond or free, rich or poor; and that is, to act up to the excellency of that nature which he has given them, to live by reason, to walk in the light of religion, to use every thing as wildom directs, to glorify God in all his gifts, and dedicate every condition of life to his fervice.

This is the one common command of God to all mankind. If you have an employment, you are to be thus reasonable, and pious and holy in the exercise of it; if you have time, and a fortune in your own power, you are obliged to be thus reasonable, and holy, and pious, in the use of all your time, and all your fortune.

The right religious use of every thing, and every talent, is the indispensable duty of every being that is capable of knowing right and wrong.

For the reason why we are to do any thing as unto God, and with regard to our duty, and relation to him, is the same reason, why we are to do every thing as unto God, and with regard to our duty, and relation to him.

That, which is a reason for our being wise and holy in the discharge of all our business, is the same reason for our being wise and holy in the use of all our money.

As

As we have always the fame natures, and are everywhere the fervants of the fame God, as every place is equally full of his prefence, and every thing is equally his gift, fo we must always act according to the reason of our nature; we must do every thing as the fervants of God; we must live in every place, as in his prefence; we must use every thing, as that ought to be used, which belongs to God.

Either this piety and wisdom, and devotion is to go through every way of life, and to extend to the use of every thing, or it is to go through no part of life.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God, if we might difregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or in any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place.

If therefore some people fancy, that they must be grave and folemn at church, but may be filly and frantick at home; that they must live by some rule on the Sunday, but may spend other days by chance; that they must have some times of Prayer, but may waste the rest of their time as they please; that they must give some money in charity, but may fquander away the rest as they have a mind; fuch people have not enough confidered the nature of Religion, or the true reasons of piety. For he that upon principles of reason can tell, why it is good to be wife and heavenly minded at church, can tell that it's always defirable, to have the fame tempers in all other places. He that truly knows, why he should spend any time well, knows that it is never allowable to throw any time away. He that rightly underflands the reasonableness, and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excufable to waste any of our money in pride and folly, or in any needlefs expences.

For every argument that flews the wifdom and excellency of charity, proves the wifdom of fpending all our fortune well. Every argument that proves the wifdom and reasonableness of having times of prayer, shews the wifdom and reasonableness of losing none of our time.

If any one could flew, that we need not always act as in the divine prefence, that we need not confider and use every thing, as the gift of God, that we need not always live by reason, and make religion the rule of all our actions, the same arguments would shew, that we need never act as in the presence of God, nor make religion and reason the measure of any of our actions. If therefore we are to live unto God at any time, or in any place, we are to live unto him at all times, and all places. If we are to use any thing as the gift of God, we are to use every thing as his gift. If we are to do any thing by strict rules of reason and piety, we ought to do every thing in the same manner. Because reason, and wisdom, and piety are as much the best things at all times, and in all places, as they are the best things at any time,

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wifdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the Divine nature; then it must be our glory and happiness, to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our pow-They therefore, who confine religion to times and places, and fome little rules of retirement, who think that it is being too strict and rigid to introduce religion into common life, and make it give laws to all their actions and ways of living, they who think thus, not only mistake, but they mistake the whole nature of religion. For furely they mistake the whole nature of religion, who can think, any part of their life is made more easy. for being free from it. They may well be faid to miltake the whole nature of wildom, who don't think it defirable to be always wife. He has not learnt the nature of piety, who thinks it too much to be pious in all his actions. He does not fufficiently understand what reafon is, who does not earnestly defire to live in every thing according to it.

If we had a Religion that confilled in abfurd fuperfittions, that had no regard to the perfection of our nature, people might well be glad to have some part of their life excused from it. But as the Religion of the Gospel is only the refinement and exaltation of our best faculties, as it only requires a life of the highest Reason, as it only requires us to use this world as in reason it

bought to be used, to live in such tempers as are the glory of intelligent beings, to walk in fuch wifdom as exalts our nature, and to practife fuch piety, as will raife us to God; who can think it grievous, to live always in the fpirit of fuch a religion, to have every part of his life full of it, but he that would think it much more grievous, to be as the angels of God in heaven?

Farther, as God is one and the fame Being, always acting like himfelf and fuitably to his own nature, fo it is the duty of every being that he has created, to live according to the nature that he has given it, and always to act like itself.

It is therefore an immutable law of God, that all rational beings should act reasonably in all their actions; not at this time, or in that place, or upon this occasion, or in the use of some particular thing, but at all times, in all places, at all occasions, and in the use of all things. This is a law that is as unchangeable as God, and can no more cease to be, than God can cease to be a God of wifdom and order.

When therefore any being that is endued with reason does an unreasonable thing at any time, or in any place, or in the use of any thing, it sins against the great law of its nature, abuses itself, and fins against God the author of that nature.

They therefore, who plead for indulgences and vanities, for any foolish fashions, customs and humours of the world, for the mifule of our time or money, plead for a rebellion against our nature, for a rebellion against God, who has given us reason for no other end, than to make it the rule and measure of all our ways of life.

When therefore you are guilty of any folly or extravagance, or indulge any vain temper, don't confider it as a fmall matter, because it may seem so, if compared to fome other fins; but confider it, as it is acting contrary to your nature, and then you will fee that there is nothing fmall that is unreasonable. Because all unreasonable ways are contrary to the nature of all rational beings, whether men or angels. Neither of which can be any longer agreeable to God, than fo far as they act according to the reason and excellence of their nature.

The infirmities of human life make fuch food and raiment necessary for us, as angels do not want; but then it is no more allowable for us to turn these necessities into follies, and indulge ourfelves in the luxury of food, or the vanities of drefs, than it is allowable for Angels to act below the dignity of their proper state. fonable life, and a wife use of our proper condition, is as much the duty of all men, as it is the duty of all Angels and intelligent beings. These are not speculative flights, or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational beings who as fuch are obliged to live by reason, and glorify God by a continual right use of their feveral talents and faculties. So that though men are not Angels, yet they may know for what ends, and by what rules men are to live and act, by confidering the frate and perfection of Angels. Our bleffed Saviour has plainly turned our thoughts this way, by making this petition a conftant part of all our prayers, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. plain proof, that the obedience of men, is to imitate the obedience of Angels, and that rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him.

When therefore you would reprefent to your mind, how Christians ought to live unto God, and in what degrees of wisdom and holiness they ought to use the things of this life; you must not look at the world, but you must look up to God, and the society of Angels, and think what wisdom and holiness is sit to prepare you for such a state of glory; you must look to all the highest precepts of the Gospel; you must examine yourself by the spirit of Christ; you must think how the wises must have lived; you must think how departed souls would live, if they were again to act the short par of human life; you must think what degrees of wisdom and holiness, you will wish for, when you are leaving

Now all this is not over-straining the matter, or proposing to ourselves any needless persection. It is but barely complying with the Apostle's advice, where he says, Finally brethren, whatseever things are true, what sever things are just, whatseever things are just, whatsever things are just ever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and the

there be any praise, think on these things, Phil. iv. 8. For no one can come near the doctrine of this passage, but he that proposes to himself to do every thing in this life as a servant of God, to live by reason in every thing that he does, and to make the wisdom and holiness of the gospel, the rule and measure of his desiring and using every gift of God.

CHAP, VI.

Containing the great obligations, and the great advantages of making a wife and religious use of our estates and fortunes.

A S the holiness of Christianity confecrates all states and employments of life unto God, as it requires us to aspire after an universal obedience, doing and using every thing as the servants of God, so are we more especially obliged to observe this religious exactness, in the use of our estates and fortunes.

The reason of this would appear very plain, if we were only to consider, that our estate is as much the gift of God, as our eyes, or our hands, and is no more to be buried, or thrown away at pleasure, than we are to put out our eyes, or throw away our limbs, as we please. But besides this consideration, there are several other great and important reasons, why we should be religiously exact in the use of our estates.

First, Because the manner of using our money, or spending our estate, enters so far into the business of every day, and makes so great a part of our common life, that our common life must be much of the same nature, as our common way of spending our estate. If reason and religion govern us in this; then reason and religion hath got great hold of us; but if humour, pride and sancy, are the measures of our spending our estates, then humour, pride and fancy, will have the direction of the greatest part of our life.

eftate to right uses, is this, because it is capable of being used to the most excellent purposes, and is so great a means of doing good. If we waste it, we don't waste a trifle, that signifies little, but we waste that which might be made as eyes to the blind, as a husband to the widow, as a father to the orphan; We waste that, which not only enables us to minister worldly comforts to those that are in distress, but that which might purchase for ourselves everlasting treasures in heaven. So that if we part with our money in soolish ways, we part with a great power of comforting our sellow-creatures, and of making ourselves for ever blessed.

If there be nothing fo glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us fo like to God, then nothing can be fo glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness, making ourselves friends, fathers, benefactors, to all our fellow-creatures, imitating the divine love, and turning all our power into acts of generosity, care and kindness, to such as are in need of it.

If a man had eyes, and hands, and feet, that he could give to those that wanted them; if he should either lock them up in a chest, or please himself with some needless or ridiculous use of them, instead of giving them to his brethren that were blind and lame, should we not justly reckon him an inhuman wretch? If he should rather chuse to amuse himself with furnishing his house with those things, than to entitle himself to an eternal reward, by giving them to those that wanted eyes and hands, might we not justly reckon him mad?

Now money has very much the nature of eyes and feet; if we either lock it up in chefts, or wafte it in needless and ridiculous expences upon ourselves, whilst the poor and the distressed want it for their necessary uses; if we consume it in the ridiculous ornaments of apparel, whilst others are starving in nakedness, we are not far from the cruelty of him that chuses rather to adorn his house with the hands and eyes, than to give them to those that want them. If we chuse to indulge ourselves in such expensive enjoyments, as have no real use in them, such as satisfy no real want, rather than to entitle ourselves to an eternal reward, by disposing of our

our money well, we are guilty of his madness, that rather chuses to lock up eyes and hands, than to make himself for ever blessed, by giving them to those that want them.

For after we have fatisfied our own fober and reasonable wants, all the rest of our money is but like spare eyes, or hands; it is something that we cannot keep to ourselves, without being soolish in the use of it, something that can only be used well, by giving it to those that want it.

Thirdly, If we waste our money, we are not only guilty of wasting a talent which God has given us, we are not only guilty of making that useless, which is so powerful a means of doing good, but we do ourselves this farther harm, that we turn this useful talent into a powerful means of corrupting ourselves; because so fome wrong, so far it is spent in the support of some wrong temper, in gratifying some vain and unreasonable defires in conforming to those fashions, and pride of the world, which, as Christians and reasonable men, we are obliged to renounce.

As wit and fine parts cannot be trifled away and only loft, but will expose those that have them into greater follies, if they are not strictly devoted to piety; so money, if it is not used strictly according to reason and religion, cannot only be trifled away, but it will betray people into greater follies, and make them live a more filly and extravagant life, than they could have done without If, therefore, you don't spend your money in doing good to others, you must spend it to the hurt of yourfelf. You will act, like a man, that should refuse to give that as a cordial to a fick friend, though he could not drink it himfelf without inflaming his blood. For this is the case of superfluous money; if you give it to those that want it, it is a cordial; if you spend it upon yourfelf in fomething that you do not want, it only inflames and diforders your mind, and makes you worfe than you would be without it.

Confider again the forementioned comparison; if the man that would not make a right use of spare eyes and hands, should by continually trying to use them himself,

him of still greater madness.

Now this is truly the case of riches spent upon ourfelves in vain and needless expences; in trying to use them where they have no real use, nor we any real want, we only use them to our great hurt, in creating unrea-fonable defires, in nourishing ill tempers, in indulging our passions, and supporting a worldly, vain turn of mind. For high eating and drinking, fine cloaths, and fine houses, state and equipage, gay pleasures and diverfions, do all of them naturally hurt and diforder our hearts; they are the food and nourishment of all the folly and weakness of our nature, and are certain means to make us vain and worldly in our tempers. They are all of them the support of something that ought not to be supported; they are contrary to that sobriety and piety of heart, which relishes divine things; they are like fo many weights upon our minds, that makes us lefs able, and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above.

So that money thus fpent, is not merely wasted or lost, but it is spent to bad purposes, and miserable effects, to the corruption and disorder of our hearts, and to the making us less able to live up to the sublime doctrines of the Gospel. It is but like keeping money from the poor, to buy poifon for ourfelves.

For fo much as is fpent in the vanity of drefs, may be reckoned fo much laid out to fix vanity in our minds. So much as is laid out for idleness and indulgence, may be reckoned fo much given to render our hearts dull and fensual. So much as is spent in state and equipage, may be reckoned so much spent to dazzle your own eyes, and render you the idol of your own imagination. And so in every thing, when you go from reasonable wants, you only support some unreasonable temper, some turn of mind, which every good christian is called upon to renounce.

So that on all accounts, whether we confider our fortune as a talent and trust from God, or the great good that it enables us to do, or the great harm that it does to ourselves, if idly spent; on all these great accounts it appears, that it is abfolutely necessary, to make reason and religion the strict rule of using all our fortune.

Every exhortation in Scripture to be wife and reasonable, fatisfying only fuch wants as God would have fatisfied; every exhortation to be spiritual and heavenly. preffing after a glorious change of our nature; every exhortation to love our neighbour as ourfelves, to love all mankind as God has loved them, is a command to be strictly religious in the use of our money. of these tempers can be complied with, unless we be wife and reasonable, spiritual and heavenly, exercising a brotherly love, a godlike charity in the use of all our fortune. These tempers, and this use of our worldly goods, is fo much the doctrine of all the New Testament, that you can't read a chapter, without being taught fomething of it. I shall only produce one remarkable pasfage of scripture, which is sufficient to justify all that I have faid concerning this religious use of all our fortune.

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats; and he shall fet the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King fay unto them on his right hand, Come, ye bleffed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye cloathed me; I was fick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me.-Then shall he say unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye curled, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye cloathed me not; fick, and in prison, and ye vifited me not. Thefe shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

I have quoted this passage at length, because if one looks at the way of the world, one would hardly think, that Christians had ever read this part of Scripture. For what is there in the lives of Christians, that looks as if their falvation depended upon these good works? And yet the necessity of them is here afferted in the highest manner, and pressed upon us by a lively description of the glory and terrors of the day of judgment.

Some people, even of those who may be reckoned virtuous Christians, look upon this text only as a general recommendation of occasional works of charity; whereas it shews the necessity not only of occasional charities now and then, but the necessity of such an entire charitable life, as is a continual exercise of all such works of charity as we are able to perform.

You own, that you have no title to falvation, if you have neglected these good works; because such persons as have neglected them, are at the last day to be placed on the left hand, and banished with a depart ye cursed. There is, therefore, no falvation but in the performance of these good works. Who is it, therefore, that may be faid to have performed these good works? Is it he that has fometimes affifted a prifoner, or relieved the poor or fick? This would be as abfurd, as to fay, that he had performed the duties of devotion, who had sometimes faid his prayers. Is it, therefore, he that has feveral times done these works of charity? This can no more be faid, than he can be faid to be the truly just man, who had done acts of justice several times. What is the rule therefore, or measure of performing these good works? How shall a man trust that he performs them as he ought?

Now the rule is very plain and easy, and such as is common to every other virtue, or good temper, as well as to charity.—Who is the humble, or meek, or devout, or just, or faithful man? Is it he that has several times done acts of humility, meekness, devotion, justice, or fidelity? No. But it is he that lives in the habitual exercise of these virtues. In like manner, he only can be said to have performed these works of charity, who lives in the habitual exercise of them to the utmost of his power. He only has performed the duty of divine love, who loves God with all his heart, and with all his mind, and with all his strength. And he only has performed the duty of these good works, who has done them with all his heart, and with all his mind, and with all his strength. For there is no other measure of our doing good, than our power of doing it.

The Apostle St. Peter puts this question to our blessed Saviour, Lord, how oft shall my brother fin against me, and I forgive kim, till seven times? Fesus saith unto him, I fay not unto thee, until feven Mat. iii 22.

times; but until seventy times seven. Not as if after this number of offences, a man might then cease to forgive; by the expression of seventy times seven, is to fhew us that we are not to bound our forgiveness by any number of offences, but are to continue forgiving the most repeated offences against us. Thus our Saviour faith in another place, if he

day, and feven times in a day turn again to thee, faying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him. If, therefore, a man ceases to forgive his brother, because he has forgiven him often already; if he excules himfelf from forgiving this man, because he has forgiven several others; fuch a one breaks this law of Christ, concerning the forgiving one's brother.

Now the rule of forgiving, is also the rule of giving; you are not to give, or do good to feven, but to feventy times feven. You are not to ceafe from giving, because you have given often to the fame person, or to other perfons; but must look upon yourself as much obliged to continue relieving those that continue in wants, as you was obliged to relieve them once, or twice. Had it not been in your power, you had been excused from relieving any person once; but if it is in your power to relieve people often, it is as much your duty to do it often, as it is the duty of others to do it but feldom, because they are but seldom able. He that is not ready to forgive every brother, as often as he wants to be forgiven, does not forgive like a disciple of Christ. And he that is not ready to give to every brother, that wants to have fomething given him, does not give like a difciple of Christ. For it is as necessary to give to seventy times feven, to live in the continual exercise of all good D 3 works to the utmost of our power, as it is necessary to forgive until seventy times seven, and live in the habitual exercise of this forgiving temper towards all that want it

And the reason of all this is very plain, because there is the same goodness, the same excellency, and the same necessity of being thus charitable at one time, as at another. It is as much the best use of our money, to be always doing good with it, as it is the best use of it at any particular time; so that that which is a reason for a charitable action, is as good a reason for a charitable life. That which is a reason for forgiving one offence, is the same reason for forgiving all offences. For such charity has nothing to recommend it to-day, but what will be the same recommendation of it to-morrow; and you cannot neglect it at one time, without being guilty of the same sin, as if you neglected it at another time.

As fure, therefore, as these works of charity are neceffary to falvation, fo fure is it, that we are to do them to the utmost of our power; not to-day, or to-morrow. but through the whole course of our life. If therefore it be our duty at any time to deny ourselves any needless expences, to be moderate and frugal, that we may have to give to those that want, it is as much our duty to do fo at all times, that we may be farther able to do more good: For if it is at any time a fin to prefer needlefs, vain expence to works of charity, it is fo at all times: because charity as much excels all needless and vain expences at one time as at another. So that if it is ever necessary to our falvation, to take care of thefe works of charity, and to fee that we make ourfelves in fome degree capable of doing them; it is as necessary to our falvation, to take care to make ourselves as capable as we can be, of performing them in all the parts of our life.

Either therefore you must so far renounce your Christianity, as to say, that you need never perform any of these good works; or you must own, that you are to perform them all your life in as high a degree as you are able. There is no middle way to be taken, any more than there is a middle way betwixt pride and humility, or temperance and intemperance. If you do not strive to fulfil all charitable works, if you neglect any of them that are in your power, and deny affiltance to those that want what you can give, let it be when it will, or where it will, you number yourself amongst those that want Christian charity. Because it is as much your duty to do good with all that you have, and to live in the continual exercise of good works, as it is your duty to be temperate in all that you eat and drink.

Hence also appears the necessity of renouncing all those foolish and unreasonable expenses, which the pride and folly of mankind has made so common and failionable in the world. For if it is necessary to do good works as far as you are able, it must be as necessary to renounce those needless ways of spending money, which render you unable to do works of charity.

You must therefore no more conform to these ways of the world, than you must conform to the vices of the world: you must no more spend with those that idly waste their money as their own humour leads them, that you must drink with the drunken, or indulge yourself with the Epicure; because a course of such expences is no more confiftent with a life of charity, than excess in drinking is confiftent with a life of fobriety. When therefore any one tells you of the lawfulness of expensive apparel, of the innocency of pleafing yourfelf with coftly fatisfactions, only imagine that the same person was to tell you, that you need not do works of charity, that Christ does not require you to do good unto your poor brethren, as unto him, and then you will see the wickedness of fuch advice; for to tell you, that you may live in fuch expences, as to make it impossible for you to live in the exercise of good works, is the same thing as telling you, that you need not have any care about fuch good works themselves.

CHAP. VII.

How the imprudent use of an estate corrupts all the tempers of the mind, and fills the heart with poor and ridiculous passions through the whole course of life; represented in the cha after of Flavia.

Thas already been observed, that a prudent and religious care is to be used. in the manner of spending our money or estate, because the manner of spending our estate makes so great a part of our common life, and is so much the business of every day, that according as we are wise, or imprudent, in this respect, the whole course of our lives, will be rendered either very wise, or very full of folly.

Persons that are well affected to Religion, that receive instructions of piety with pleasure and satisfaction, often wonder how it comes to pass, that they make no greater progress in that religion which they so much admire.

Now the reason of it is this: it is because Religion lives only in their head, but something else has possession of their hearts; and therefore they continue from year to year mere admirers, and praisers of piety, without ever coming up to the reality and perfection of its precepts.

If it be asked why Religion does not get possession of their hearts, the reason is this. It is not because they live in gross sins, or debaucheries, for their regard to religion preferves them from fuch diforders.

But it is because their hearts are constantly employed, perverted, and kept in a wrong state, by the indiscreet use of such things as are lawful to be used.

The use and enjoyment of their estates is lawful, and therefore it never comes into their heads to imagine any great danger from that quarter. They never reslect, that there is a vain, and imprudent use of their estates, which though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet so disorders the heart, and supports it in such sensually and dulness, such pride and vanity, as makes it incapable of receiving the life and spirit of piety.

For

For our fouls may receive an infinite hurt, and be rendered incapable of all virtue, merely by the use of innocent and lawful things.

What is more innocent than rest and retirement? And yet what more dangerous, than sloth and idleness? What is more lawful than eating and drinking? And yet what more destructive of all virtue, what more fruitful of all vice, than sensuality and indulgence?

How lawful and praife-worthy is the care of a family? And yet how certainly are many people rendered incapable of all virtue, by a worldly and folicitous tem-

Now it is for want of religious exactness in the use of these innocent and lawful things, that Religion cannot get possession of our hearts. And it is in the right and prudent management of ourselves, as to these things, that all the art of holy living chiefly consists.

Gross fins are plainly feen, and easily avoided by perfons that profess religion. But the indiscreet and dangerous use of innocent and lawful things, as it does not shock and offend our conscience, so it is difficult to make people at all fensible of the danger of it.

A Gentleman that expends all his estate in sports, and a woman that lays out all her fortune upon herself, can hardly be perfuaded that the spirit of Religion cannot fubfift in fuch a way of life.

These persons, as has been observed, may live free from debaucheries, they may be friends of religion, so far as to praise and speak well of it, and admire it in their imaginations; but it cannot govern their hearts, and by the spirit of their actions, till they change their way of life, and let Religion give laws to the use and spending of their estates.

For a woman that loves drefs, that thinks no expence too great to beftow upon the adorning of her person, cannot stop there. For that temper draws a thousand other follies along with it, and will render the whole course of her life, her business, her conversation, her hopes, her fears, her taste, her pleasures, and diversions,

Flavia and Miranda are two maiden fifters, that have each of them two hundred pounds a year. They buried their parents twenty years ago, and have fince that time

fpent their estate as they pleased.

Flavia has been the wonder of all her friends, for her excellent management, in making fo furprizing a figure on so moderate a fortune. Several ladies that have twice her fortune, are not able always to be so genteel, and fo constant at all places of pleasure and expence. She has every thing that is in the fashion, and is in every place where there is any diversion. Flavia is very orthodox, she talks warmly against heretics, and schifmatics, is generally at Church, and often at the facrament. She once commended a fermon that was against the pride and vanity of dress, and thought it was very just against Lucinda, whom she takes to be a great deal finer than she need to be. If any one asks Flavia to do fomething in charity, if she likes the person who makes the proposal, or happens to be in a right temper, she will tofs him half a crown, or a crown, and tell him, if he knew what a long Milliner's bill she had just received he would think it a great deal for her to give. A quarter of a year after this, she hears a fermon upon the necessity of charity; fhe thinks the man preaches well, that it is a very proper subject, that people want much to be put in mind of it; but she applies nothing to herself, because she remembers that she gave a crown some time ago, when the could fo ill fpare it.

As for poor people themselves, she will admit of no complaints from them; she is very positive they are all cheats and liars, and will say any thing to get relief, and therefore it must be a sin to encourage them in their evil ways.

You would think Flavia had the tenderest conscience in the world, if you was to see how scrupulous and apprehensive she is of the guilt and danger of giving a-miis.

She huys all books of wit and humour, and has made an expensive collection of all our English Poets. For, she says, one cannot have a true taste of any of them, without being very conversant with them all.

She will fometimes read a book of piety, if it is a fhort one, if it is much commended for flile and language, and the can tell where to borrow it.

Fiavia is very idle, and yet very fond of fine work; this makes her often fit working in bed until noon, and be told many a long ftory before she is up; so that I need not tell you that her morning devotions are not always rightly performed.

Flavia would be a miracle of piety, if she was but half so careful of her soul as she is of her body. The rising of a pimple in her face, the sting of a gnat, will make her keep her room two or three days, and she thinks they are very rash people, that do not take care of things in time. This makes her so over careful of her health, that she never thinks she is well enough; and so over-indulgent, that she never can be really well. So that it costs her a great deal in sleeping draughts, and waking-draughts, in spirits for the head, in drops for the nerves, in cordials for the stomach, and in saffron for her tea.

If you visit Flavia on the Sunday, you will always meet good company, you will know what is doing in the world, you will hear the last lampoon, be told who wrote it, and who is meant by every name that is in it. You will hear what plays were acted that week, which is the finest fong in the opera, who was intolerable at the last affembly, and what games are most in fashion. Flavia thinks they are Atheists that play at cards on the Sunday, but she will tell you the nicety of all the games, what cards fhe held, how fhe played them, and the hiflory of all that happened at play, as foon as the comes from church. If you would know who is rude and illnatured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. If you would know what is the quarrel at a certain house, or who and who are in love. If you would know how late Belinda comes home at night, what cloaths she has bought, how she loves compliments, and what a long ftory she told at such a place. If you would know how cross Lucius is to his wife, what ill-natured things he fays to her when nobody hears him; if you would know how they hate one another in their hearts, though they appear fo kind in public; you must visit Flavia on the Sunday. But still she has fo great a regard for the holiness of the Sunday, that the has turned a poor old widow out of her house, as a

her cloaths on the Sunday night.

Thus lives Flavia; and if the lives ten years longer, fhe will have spent about fifteen hundred and fixty Sundays after this manner. She will have wore about two hundred different fuits of clothes. Out of this thirty years of her life, fifteen of them will have been disposed of in bed; and of the remaining fifteen, about fourteen of them will have been confumed in eating drinking dreffing, vifiting, converfation, reading and hearing Plays and Romances, at Operas, Assemblies, Balls and Diver-For you may reckon all the time she is up, thus fpent, except about an hour and half, that is disposed of at Church, most Sundays in the year. With great management, and under mighty rules of oeconomy, she will have fpent fixty hundred pounds upon herfelf, bating only fome shillings, crowns, or half-crowns, that have gone from her in accidental charities.

I shall not take upon me to say, that it is impossible for Flavia to be saved; but thus much must be said, that she has no grounds from Scripture to think she is in the way of salvation. For her whole life is in direct opposition to all those tempers and practices, which the gospel has made necessary to falvation.

If you was to hear her fay, that she had lived all her life like Anna the Prophetels, who departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day, you would look upon her as very extravagant; and yet this would be no greater an extravagance, than for her to fay, that she had been striving to enter in at the strait gate, or making any one doctrine of the gospel, a rule of her life.

She may as well fay, that she lived with our Saviour when he was upon earth, as that she has lived in imitation of him, or made it any part of her care to live in tuch tempers, as he required of all those that would be his disciples. She may as truly fay, that she has every day washed the saints seet, as that she has lived in christian humility, and poverty of spirit; and as reasonably think, that she has taught a charity-school, as that she has lived in works of charity. She has as much reason to think, that she has been a centinel in an army, as that fhe has lived in watching and felf-denial. And it may as fairly be faid, that the lived by the labour of her hands, as that the had given all diligence to make her calling and election sure.

And here it is well to be observed, that the poor, vain turn of mind, the irreligion, the folly and vanity of this whole life of Flavia, is all owing to the manner of using her estate. It is this that has formed her spirit, that has given life to every idle temper, that has supported every trisling passion, and kept her from all thoughts of a prudent, useful, and devout life.

When her parents died, she had no thought about her two hundred pounds a year, but that she had so much money to to do what she would with, to spend upon herfelf, and purchase the pleasures and gratifications of all her passions.

And it is this fetting out, this false judgement, and indiscreet use of their fortune, that has filled her whole life with the same indiscretion, and kept her from thinking of what is right, and wise, and pious in every thing elle.

If you have feen her delighted in plays and romances, in fcandal and backbiting, eafily flattered, and foon affronted. If you have feeu her devoted to pleafures and diversions, a flave to every passion in its turn, nice in every thing that concerned her body or dress, careless of every thing that might benefit her soul, always wanting some new entertainment, and ready for every happy invention, in shew or dress, it was because she had purchased all these tempers with the yearly revenue of her fortune.

She might have been humble, ferious, devout, a lover of good books, an admirer of prayer and retirement, careful of her time, diligent in good works, full of charity and the love of God, but that the imprudent use of her estate forced all the contrary tempers upon her.

And it was no wonder, that she should turn her time, her mind, her health and strength to the same uses that she turned her fortune. It is owing to her being wrong in so great an article of life, that you can

fee nothing wife, or reasonable, or pious in any other part of it.

Now though the irregular trifling spirit of this character belongs, I hope, but to few people, yet many may here learn some instruction from it, and perhaps fee fomething of their own spirit in it.

For as Flavia feems to be undone by the unreasonable use of her fortune, so the lowness of most people's virtue, the imperfections of their piety, and the disorders of their passions, is generally owing to their imprudent use and enjoyment of lawful and innocent things.

More people are kept from a true fense and state of Religion by a regular kind of sensuality and indulgence, than by gross drunkenness. More men live regardless of the great duties of piety, through too great a concern for worldly goods, than through direct injuftice.

This man would perhaps be devout, if he was not fo great a Virtuofo. Another is deaf to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle, flothful temper.

Could you cure This man of his great curiofity and inquisitive temper, or That of his false satisfaction and thirst after learning, you need do no more to make them both become men of great piety.

If This woman would make fewer vifits, or That not be always talking, they would neither of them find it half so hard to be affected with religion.

For all these things are only little, when they are compared to great sins; and though they are little in that respect, yet they are great, as they are impediments, and hindrances of a pious spirit.

For as confideration is the only eye of the foul, as the truths of religion can be feen by nothing elfe, fo whatever raifes a levity of mind, a trifling fpirit, renders the foul incapable of feeing, apprehending, and relifhing the doctrines of piety.

Would we therefore make a real progress in religion, we must not only abhor gross and notorious sins, but we must regulate the innocent and lawful parts of our behaviour, and put the most common and allowed actions of life under the rules of discretion and piety.

CHAP. VIII.

How the wife and pious use of an estate naturally carrieth us to great perfection in all the virtues of the Christian life; represented in the character of Miranda.

A NY one pious regularity of any one part of our life, is of great advantage, not only on its own account, but as it uses us to live by rule, and think of the government of ourselves.

A man of business, that has brought one part of his affairs under certain rules, is in a fair way to take the fame care of the rest.

So he that has brought any one part of his life under the rules of religion, may thence be taught to extend the fame order and regularity into other parts of his life.

If any one is fo wife to think his time too pernicious to be disposed of by chance, and left to be devoured by any thing that happens in his way. If he lays himfelf under a necessity of observing how every day goes through his hands, and obliges himself to a certain order of time in his business, his retirements, and devotions, it is hardly to be imagined, how soon such a conduct would resorm, improve, and perfect the whole course of his life.

He that once knows the value, and reaps the advantage of a well-ordered time, will not long be a stranger to the value of any thing else that is of any real concern to him.

A rule that relates even to the smallest part of our life, is of great benefit to us, merely as it is a rule.

For, as the proverb faith, He that has begun well, has half done: So he that has begun to live by rule, has gone a great way towards the perfection of his own life.

By rule, must here be constantly understood, a religious rule, observed upon a principle of duty to God.

For if a man should oblige himself to be moderate in his meals, only in regard to his stomach, or abstain from drinking, only to avoid the head-ach; or be moderate in his fleep, through fear of a lethargy, he might be exact in these rules, without being at all the better man for them.

But when he is moderate and regular in any of these things, out of a sense of Christian sobriety, and self-denial, that he may offer unto God a more reasonable and holy life, then it is that the smallest rule of this kind, is naturally the beginning of great piety.

For the smallest rule in these matter is of great benefit, as it teaches us some part of the government of ourselves, as it keeps up a tenderness of mind, as it presents God often to our thoughts, and brings a sense of religion into the ordinary actions of our common life.

If a man, whenever he was in company, where any one fwore, talked lewdly, or fpoke evil of his neighbour, should make it a rule to himself, either gently to reprove him, or if that was not proper, then to leave the company as decently as he could; he would find, that this little rule, like a little leaven hid in a great quantity of meal, would spread and extend itself through the whole form of his life.

If another should oblige himself to abstain on the Lord's-day from mary innocent and lawful things, as travelling, visiting, common conversation, and discoursing upon worldly matters, as trade, news, and the like; if he should devote the day, besides the public worship, to greater retirement, reading, devotion, instruction, and works of Charity: Though it may seem but a small thing, or a needless nicety, to require a man to abstain from such things, as may be done without sin, yet whoever would try the benefit of so little a rule, would perhaps thereby find such a change made in his spirit, and such a taste of piety raised in his mind, as he was an entire stranger to before.

It would be eafy to flew in many other inflances, how little and small matters are the first steps, and natural beginnings of great perfection.

But the two things, which of all others most want to be under a strict rule, and which are the greatest blessings both to ourselves and others, when they are rightly used. are our time, and our money. These talents are continual means and opportunities of doing good.

He He that is piously strict, and exact in the wise management of either of these, cannot be long ignorant of the right use of the other. And he that is happy in the religious care and disposal of them both, is already ascended several steps upon the ladder of Christian persection.

Miranda, (the fifter of Flavia) is a fober reasonable Christian; as soon as she was mistress of her time and fortune, it was her first thought, how she might best fulfil every thing that God required of her in theuse of them, and how she might make the best and happiest use of this fhort life. She depends upon the truth of what our bleffed Lord hath faid, that there is but one thing needful, and therefore makes her whole life but one continual labour after it. She has but one reason for doing or not doing, for liking or not liking any thing, and that is the will of God. She is not fo weak as to pretend to add, what is called the fine lady, to the true Christian; Miranda thinks too well to be taken with the found of fuch filly words; fhe has renounced the world, to follow Christ in the exercise of humility, charity, devotion, abstinence, and heavenly affections; and that is Miranda's fine breeding.

Whilst she was under her mother, she was forced to be genteel, to live in ceremony, to fit up late at nights, to be in the folly of every fashion, and always visiting on Sundays. To go patched, and loaded with a burden of finery to the holy Sacrament; to be in every polite conversation, to hear prophaneness at the play-house, and wanton songs and love intrigues at the opera, to dance at public places, that sops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions. The remembrance of this way of life, makes her exceedingly careful to atone for it, by a contrary

Miranda does not divide her duty between God, her neighbour, and herfelf, but she considers all as due to God, and so does every thing in his name, and for his sake. This makes her consider her fortune as the gift of God, that is to be used as every thing is, that belongs to God, for the wise and reasonable ends of a christian and holy life. Her fortune therefore is divided betwixt herfelf, and several other poor people, and she has only her part of relief from it. She thinks it the fame folly to indulge herfelf in needlefs, vain expences, as to give to other people to fpend in the same way. Therefore asthe will not give a poor man money to go to fee a puppet-show, neither will she allow herself any to spend in the fame manner; thinking it very proper to be as wife herfelf, as the expects poor men thould be. folly and a crime in a poor man, fays Miranda, to waste what is given him, in foolish trifles, whilst he wants meat, drink, and clothes? And is it less folly, or a less crime in me to fpend that money in filly diversions, which might be fo much better fpent in imitation of the divine goodness, in works of kindness and charity towards my fellow Creatures, and fellow Christians? If a poor man's own necessities are a reason, why he should not waste any of his money idly, furely the necessities of the poor, the excellency of charity, which is received as done to Christ himself, is a much greater reason, why no one should ever waste any of his money. For if he does so he does not only do like the poor man, only waste that which he wants himself, but he wastes that which is wanted for the most noble use, and which Christ himself is ready to receive at his hands. And if we are angry at at a poor man, and look upon him as a wretch, when he throws away that which should buy his own bread; how much we appear in the fight of God, if he make a wanton idle use of that which would buy bread and ciothes for the hungry and naked brethren, who are as near and dear to God as we are, and fellow heirs of the fame state of future glory? This is the spirit of Miranda. and thus she uses the gifts of God: she is only one of a certain number of poor people, that are relieved out of her fortune, and the only differs from them in the bleffedness of giving.

Excepting her victuals, fhe never spent ten pounds a year upon herseis. If you was to see her, you would wonder what poor body it was that was so surprisingly neat and clean. She has but one rule that she observes in her dress, to be always clean and in the cheapest things. Every thing about her resembles the purity of her soul, and she is always clean without, because she is always pure within.

Every

Every morning fees her early at her prayers, she rejoices in the beginning of every day, because it begins all her pious rules of holy living, and brings the fresh pleasure of repeating them. She seems to be as a guardian angel to those that dwell about her, with her watchings and prayers blessing the place where she dwells, and making intercession with God for those that are asseep.

Her devotions have had fome intervals, and God has heard feveral of her private prayers, before the light is fuffered to enter into her fifters room. Miranda does not know what it is to have a dull half-day; the returns of her hours of prayer, and her religious exercises, come too often to let any confiderable part of time lie heavy upon her hands.

When you fee her at work, you fee the same wisdom that governs all her other actions, the is either doing fomething that is necessary for herself or necessary for others, who want to be affilted. There is fcarce a poor family in the neighbourhood, but wears fomething or other that has had the labour of her hands. Her wife and pious mind, neither wants the amusement, nor can hear with the folly of idle and impertinent work. She can admit of no fuch folly as this in the day, because she is to answer for all her actions at night. When there is no wisdom to be observed in the employment of her hands, when there is no useful or charitable work to be done, Miranda will work no more. At her table fhe lives strictly by this rule of holy scripture, whether ye eat or drink, or whatfoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. This makes her begin and end every meal, as she begins and ends every day, with acts of devotion: She eats and drinks only for the fake of living, and with fo regular an abitinence, that every meal is an exercise of felf-denial, and she humbles her body, every time that she is forced to feed it. If Miranda was to run a race for her life, she would submit to a diet that was proper for it. But as the race which is fet before her, is a race of holiness, purity, and heavenly affection, which she is to finish in a corrupt, disordered body of earthly passions, so her every day diet has only this one end, to make her body fitter for this spiritual race. She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs weighs it in a much better balance; fo much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul, to join in psalms and prayers, and lift up eyes and hands towards heaven with greater readiness, so much is Miranda's meal. So that Miranda will never have her eyes swell with satness, or pant under a heavy load of slesh, till she has changed her religion.

The holy fcriptures, especially of the New Testament, are her daily study; these she reads with a watchful attention, constantly casting an eye upon hersels, and trying hersels, by every dostrine that is there. When the has the New Testament in her hand, she supposes hersels at the feet of our Saviour and his apostles, and makes every thing that she learns of them, so many laws of her life. She receives their sacred words with as much attention, and reverence, as if she saw their persons, and knew that they were just come from heaven, on purpose to teach her the way that leads to it.

She thinks, that the trying herfelf every day by the doctrines of Scripture, is the only possible way to be ready for her trial at the last day. She is sometimes afraid that she lays out too much money in books, because she cannot forbear buying all practical books of any note; especially such as enter into the heart of religion, and describe the inward holiness of the Christian life. But of all human writings the lives of pious perfons, and eminent faints, are her greatest delight. these she searches as for hidden treasure, hoping to find fome fecret of holy living, fome uncommon degree of piety, which she may make her own. By this means Miranda has her head and heart stored with all the principles of wildom and holiness, the is so full of the one main business of life, that she finds it disficult to converse upon any other subject; and if you are in her company, when she thinks proper to talk, you must be made wifer and better, whether you will or no.

To relate her charity, would be to relate the history of every day for twenty years; for so long has all her fortune been spent that way. She has set up near twenty poor tradesimen that had failed in their business, and saved as many from failing. She has educated several poor children, that were picked up in the streets, and put them in a way of an honest employment. As soon as any labourer is confined at home with sickness, she sends him till he recovers, twice the value of his wages, that he may have one part to give to his family, as usual, and the other to provide things convenient for his sickness.

If a family feems too large to be supported by the labour of those that can work in it, she pays their rent, and gives them something yearly towards their cloathing. By this means there are many poor families that live in a comfortable manner, and are from year to year bleffing her in their prayers.

If there is any poor man or woman, that is more than ordinarily wicked and reprobate, Miranda has her eye upon them, she watches their time of need and adversity; and if she can discover that they are in any great streights or affliction, she gives them speedy relief. She has this care for this fort of people, because she once saved a very profligate person from being carried to prison, who immediately became a true positient.

There is nothing in the character of Miranda more to be admired, than this temper. For this tenderness of affection towards the most abandoned suners, is the highest instance of a divine and godlike foul.

Miranda once passed by a house, where the man and his wife were curling and fwearing at one another in a most dreadful manner, and three children crying about them; this fight fo much affected her compailionate mind, that fine went the next day, and bought the three children, that they might not be ruined by living with fuch wicked parents; they now live with Miranda, are bleffed with her care and prayers, and all the good works which she can do for them. They hear her talk, they fee her live, they join with her in pfalms and prayers. The eldest of them has already converted his parents from their wicked life, and thew's a turn of mind fo remarkably pious, that Miranda intends him for holy orders; that being thus faved himfelf, he may be zealous in the falvation of fouls, and do to other miferable objects, as she has done to him.

misfortunes and accidents; there are fometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. The death of a cow, or a horfe, or fome little robbery, would keep them in diffress all their lives. She does not fuffer them to grieve under fuch accidents as thefe. She immediately gives them the full value of their lofs, and makes use of it as a means of raising their minds towards God.

She has a great tenderness for old people that are grown past their labour. The parish allowance to such people, is very feldom a comfortable maintenance. reason, they are the constant objects of her care; she adds fo much to their allowance, as fomewhat exceeds the wages they got when they were young. This she does to comfort the infirmities of their age, that being free from trouble and diffress they may serve God in peace and tranquillity of mind. She has generally a large number of this kind, who by her charities and exhortations to holinefs, fpend their last days in great piety and

Miranda never wants compassion, even to common beggars; especially towards those that are old or fick, or full of fores, that want eyes or limbs. She hears their complaints with tenderness, gives them some proof of her kindness, and never rejects them with hard, or reproachful language, for fear of adding affliction to her fellow-creatures.

If a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither ftrength, nor food, nor money left, she never bids him go to the place from whence he came, or tells him, that the cannot relieve him, because he may be a cheat, or fhe does not know him; but fhe relieves him for that reason, because he is a stranger, and unknown to her. For it is the most noble part of charity, to be kind and tender to those whom we never saw before, and perhaps never may fee again in this life. I was a stranger and ye took me in, faith our bleffed Saviour; but who can perform this duty, that will not relieve perfons that are unknown to him?

Miranda confiders, that Lazarus was a common beggar, that he was the care of Angels, and carried into Abraham's bosom. She confiders, that our bleffed Saviour, and his apostles, were kind to beggars; that they spoke comfortably to them, healed their diseases, and restored eves and limbs to the lame and blind. That Peter faid to the beggar that wanted an alms from him, Silver and gold have I none, but fuch as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk, Miranda, therefore, never treats beggars with disregard and aversion, but she imitates the kindness of our Saviour and his apostles towards them; and though she cannot, like them, work miracles for their relief, yet she relieves them with that power that she hath; and may fay with the Apostle, Such as I have give I thee, in the name of Jesus Christ.

It may be, says Miranda, that I may often give to those that do not deserve it, or that will make an ill use of my alms. But what then? Is not this the very method of divine goodness? Does not God make his fun to rife on the evil, and on the good? Is not this the very goodness that is recommended to us in scripture, that by imitating of it, we may be children of our Father which is in heaven, who fendeth rain on the just, and on the unjust? And shall I withhold a little money or food, from my fellow creature, for fear he should not be good enough to receive it of me? Do I beg of God to deal with me, not according to my merit, but according to his own great goodness; and shall I be so absurd, as to with-hold my charity from a poor brother, because he may perhaps not deferve it? Shall I use a measure towards him, which I pray God never to use towards me!

Besides, where has the scripture made merit the rule or measure of charity? On the contrary, the Scripture faith, If thy enemy bunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him

Now this plainly teaches us, that the merits of persons is to be no rule of our charity, but that we are to do acts of kindness to those that least of all deserve it. For if I am to love and to do good to my worst enemies; if I am to be charitable to them, notwithstanding all their fpite and malice, furely merit is no measure of charity. If I am not to withhold my charity from fuch bad people, and who are at the fame time enemies, furely I am not to deny alms to poor beggars, whom I neither know to be bad people, nor any way my enemies.

You will perhaps fay,, that by this means I encourage people to be beggars. But the fame thoughtless objection may be made against all kinds of charities, for they may encourage people to depend upon them. The fame may be faid against forgiving our enemies, for it may encourage people to do us hurt. The fame may be said even against the goodness of God, that by pouring his blessing on the evil and on the good, on the just, and on the unjust, evil and unjust men are encouraged in their wicked ways. The same may be said against cloathing the naked, or giving medicines to the sick, for that may encourage people to neglect themselves, and be careless of their health. But when the love of God dwelleth in you; when it has enlarged your heart, and filled you with bowels of mercy and compassion, you will make no more fuch objections as thefe.

When you are at any time turning away the poor, the old, the fick and helpless traveller, the lame or the blind, ask yourfelf this question; Do I sincerely wish these poor creatures may be as happy as Lazarus, that was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom? Do I fincerely defire that God would make them fellow-heirs with me in eternal glory? Now if you fearch into your foul, you will find that there is none of these motions there, that you are withing nothing of this. For it is impossible for any one heartily to with a poor creature fo great a happinels, and yet not have a heart to give him a small alms. For this reason, says Miranda, as far as I can, I give to all, because I pray to God to forgive all; and I cannot refuse an alms to those, whom I pray God to bless, whom I wish to be partakers of eternal glory; but am glad to flew fome degree of love to fuch, as, I hope, will be the objects of the infinite love of God. And if, as our Saviour has affured us, it be more bleffed to give than to receive, we ought to look upon those that ask our alms, as fo many friends and benefactors, that come to do us a greater good than they can receive, that come to exalt our virtue, to be witnesses of our charity, to be monuments of our love, to be our advocates with God, to be to us in Christ's stead, to appear for us at the day of judgment judgment, and to help us to a bleffedness greater than our alms can bestow on them.

This is the fpivit, and this is the life of the devout Miranda; and if the lives ten years longer, the will have fpent fixty hundred pounds in charity, for that which the allows herfelf, may fairly be reckoned amongst her alms.

When she dies she must shine amongst Apostles, and Saints, and Martyrs, she must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good sight, and sinished their course with joy.

CHAP. IX.

Containing fome reflections on the life of Miranda, and fhereing hore it may, and ought to be instated by all her fex.

TOW this life of Miranda, which I heartily recommend to the imitation of her fex, however contrary it may feem to the way and fashion of the world, is yet suitable to the true spirit, and sounded upon the plainest doctrines of Christianity.

To live as the does, is as truly fuitable to the gofpel of Christ, as to be baptized or receive the facrament.

Her spirit is that, which animated the saints of former ages; and it is because they lived as she does, that we now celebrate their memories, and praise God for their examples.

There is nothing that is whimfical, trifling, or unreafonable in her character; but every thing there is defcribed, in a right and proper inftance of a folid and real piety.

It is as eafy to flew, that it is whimfical to go to church, or to fay one's prayers, as that it is whimfical to observe any of these rules of life. For all Miranda's rules of living unto God, of spending her time and fortune, of eating, working, dressing and conversing, are as substantial parts of a reasonable and holy life, as devotion and prayer.

For there is nothing to be faid for the wisdom of sobriety, the wisdom of devotion, the wisdom of charity, or the wisdom of humility, but what is as good an argument for the wife and reasonable use of apparel.

Neither can any thing be faid against the folly of luxury, the folly of sensuality, the folly of extravagance, the folly of prodigality, the folly of ambition, of idleness, or indulgence, but what must be said against the folly of dress. For religion is as deeply concerned in the one as in the other.

If you may be vain in one thing, you may be vain in every thing; for one kind of vanity only differs from another, as one kind of intemperance differs from another.

If you fpend your fortune in the needless vain finery of dress, you cannot condemn prodigality, or extravagance, or luxury, without condemning yourfelf.

If you fancy that it is your only folly, and that therefore there can be no great matter in it; you are like those that think they are only guilty of the folly of covetousness, or the folly of ambition. Now though some people may live so plausible a life, as to appear chargeable with no other fault, than that of covetousness or ambition; yet the case is not as it appears, for covetousness or ambition cannot subsist in a heart that is in other respects rightly devoted to God.

In like manner, though fome people may fpend most that they have in needless expensive ornaments of dress, and yet feem to be in every other respect truly pious, yet it is certainly false; for it is as impossible for a mind that is in a true state of religion, to be vain in the use of clothes, as to be vain in the use of alms, or devotions. Now to convince you of this from your own reflections, let us suppose that some eminent faint, as for instance, that the holy Virgin Mary was fent into the world, to be again in a state of trial for a few years, and that you was going to her, to be edified by her great piety; would you expect to find her dreffed out and adorned in fine and expensive clothes? No: you would know in your own mind, that it was as impossible, as to find her learn. ing to dance. Do but add faint, or holy to any person, either man or woman, and your own mind tells you immediately, that fuch a character cannot admit of the vanity nity of fine apparel. A faint genteelly dreffed, is as great nonfenfe, as an apostle in an embroidered suit; every one's own natural sense convinces him of the inconsisten-

Now what is the reason, that when you think of a faint or eminent servant of God, you cannot admit of the vanity of apparel? Is it not because it is inconsistent with such a right state of heart, such true and exalted piety? And is not this therefore a demonstration, that where such vanity is admitted, there a right state of heart, true and exalted piety must needs be wanted? For as certainly as the holy Virgin Mary could not indulge herself, or conform to the vanity of the world in dress and sigure; so certain is it, that none can indulge themselves in this vanity, but those who want her piety of heart; and consequently it must be owned, that all needless and expensive sinery of dress, is the effect of a disordered heart, that is not governed by the true spirit of religion.

Covetousness is not a crime, because there is any harm in gold or filver, but because it supposes a foolish and unreasonable state of mind, that is fallen from its true good, and sunk into such a poor and wretched satisfaction.

In like manner, the expensive sinery of dress, is not a crime, because there is any thing good or evil in clothes, but because the expensive ornaments of cloathing shews a foolish and unreasonable state of heart, that is fallen from right notions of human nature, that abuses the end of cloathing, and turns the necositives of life into so many inflances of pride and folly.

All the world agree in condemning remarkable fops. Now what is the reason of it? Is it because there is any thing sinful in their particular dress, or affected manners? No: but it is because all people know, that it shews the state of a man's mind, and that it is impossible for so ridiculous an outside to have any thing wise or reasonable, or good within. And indeed to suppose a fop of great piety, is as much nonsense, as to suppose a coward of great courage. So that all the world agree in owning, that the use and manner of cloaths is a mark of the state of a man's mind, and consequently that it is a thing highly effential to religion. But then it should be well confidered, that as it is only the fot that is guilty of intemperance, but every one that transgresses the right and religious measures of eating and drinking; so it should be considered, that it is not only the fop that is guilty of the vanity and abuse of dress, but every one that departs from the reasonable and religious ends of cloathing. As therefore every argument against sottishness, is as good an argument against all kinds of intemperance; so every argument against the vanity of sops, is as good an argument against all vanity and abuse of dress. For they are all of the same kind, and only differ, as one degree of intemperance may differ from another. She that only paints a little, may as justly accuse another, because she paints a great deal; as she that uses but a common sinery of dress, accuses another that is excessive in her

For as in the matter of temperance, there is no rule but the fobriety, that is according to the doctrines and spirit of our religion; so in the matter of apparel, there is no rule to be observed, but such a right use of clothes, as is strictly according to the doctrines and spirit of our religion. To pretend to make the way of the world our measure in these things, is as weak and absurd, as to make the way of the world the measure of our sobriety, abstinence, or humility. It is a pretence that is exceedingly absurd in the mouths of Christians, who are to be so far from conforming to the fashions of this life, that to have overcome the world, is made an effential mark of Christianity.

This therefore is the way that you are to judge of the crime of vain apparel: you are to confider it as an offence against the proper use of clothes, as covetousness is an offence against the proper use of money; you are to confider it as an indulgence of proud and unreasonable tempers, as an offence against the humility and sobriety of the Christian spirit; you are to confider it as an offence against all those doctrines that require you to do all to the glory of God, that require you to make a right use of your talents; you are to confider it as an offence against all those texts of Scripture, that command you to love your neighbour as yourself, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, and do all works of charity that you are able: fo that you must not deceive yourself with faying, Where can be the harm of clothes? for the covetous man might as well fay, Where can be the harm of gold or filver? but you must consider, that it is a great deal of harm to want that wife, and reasonable, and humble state of heart, which is according to the spirit of religion, and which no one can have in the manner that he ought to have it, who indulges himself either in the vanity of dress, or the desire of riches.

There is therefore nothing right in the use of clothes, or in the use of any thing else in the world, but the plainness and simplicity of the gospel. Every other use of things (however polite and fashionable in the world) distracts and disorders the heart, and is inconsistent with that inward state of piety, that purity of heart, that wisdom of mind, and regularity of affection, which Christian stianity requireth.

If you would be a good christian, there is but one way, you must live wholly unto God, you must live according to the wisdom that comes from God; you must act according to the right judgments of the nature and value of things; you must live in the exercise or hely and heavenly affections, and use all the gifts of God to his praise and glory.

Some persons perhaps, who admire the purity and persection of this life of Miranda, may say, How can it be proposed as a common example? How can we who are married, or we who are under the direction of our parents, imitate fuch a life?

It is answered, just as you may imitate the life of our bleffied Saviour and his apostles. The circumstances of our Saviour's life, and the state and condition of his apostles, was more different from yours than that of Miranda's is; and yet their life, the purity and perfection of their behaviour, is the common example that is proposed to all Christians.

It is their spirit therefore, their plety, their love of God, that you are to imitate, and not the particular form of their life.

Act under God as they did, direct your common actions to that end which they did, glorify your proper flate with fuch love of God, fuch charity to your neighbour, fuch humility and felf-denial, as they did; and then, though you are only teaching your own children, and St Paul is converting whole nations, yet you are following his steps, and acting after his example.

Do not think therefore, that you cannot or need not be like Miranda, because you are not in her state of life; for as the same spirit and temper would have made Miranda a saint, though she had been forced to labour for a maintenance, so if you will but aspire after her spirit and temper, every form and condition of life will furnish you with sufficient means of employing it.

Miranda is what she is, because she does every thing in the name, and with regard to her duty to God; and when you do the same, you will be exactly like her, though you are never so different from her in the outward state of your life.

You are married, you fay; therefore you have not your time and fortune in your power as she has.

It is very true; and therefore you cannot spend so much time, nor so much money, in the manner that she does.

But now Miranda's perfection does not confift in this, that five spends so much time, or so much money in such a manner, but that she is careful to make the best use of all that time, and all that fortune, which God has put into her hands. Do you therefore make the best use of all that time and money which is in your disposal, and then you are like Miranda.

If she has two hundred pounds a year, and you have only two mites, have you not the more reason to be exceeding exact in the wisest use of it? If she has a deal of time, and you have but a little, ought you not to be the more watchful and circumspect, left that little should be loft?

You say if you was to imitate the cleanly plainness and cheapness of her dress, you should offend your hufbands.

First, Be very sure that this is true, before you make it an excuse.

Secondly, If your husbands do really require you to patch your faces, to expose your breasts naked, and to be fine and expensive in all your apparel, then take these two resolutions:

First, to forbear from all this, as soon as your husbands will permit you.

Secondly, To use your utmost endeavours to recommend yourselves to their affections by such folid virtues, as may correct the vanity of their minds, and teach them to love you for such qualities, as will make you amiable in the sight of God and his holy angels.

As to this doctrine concerning the plainness and modesty of dress, it may perhaps be thought by some to be sufficiently consuted by asking, Whether all persons are to be cloathed in the fame manner?

These questions are generally put by those, who had rather perplex the plainest truths, than be obliged to follow them.

Let it be supposed, that I had recommended an universal plainness of diet. Is it not a thing sufficiently reasonable to be universally recommended? But would it thence follow, that the nobleman and the labourer were to live upon the same food?

Suppose I had pressed an universal temperance, does not religion enough justify such a doctrine? But would it therefore follow, that all people were to drink the same liquors, and in the fame quantity?

In like manner, though plainness and sobriety of dress is recommended to all, yet it does by no means follow, that all are to be cloathed in the fame manner.

Now what is the particular rule with regard to temperance? How shall particular persons, that use different siquors, and in different quantities, preserve their temperance?

Is not this the rule? Are they not to guard against induigence, to make their use of liquors a matter of conficience, and allow of no refreshments, but such as are consistent with the strictest rules of Christian sobriety?

Now transfer this rule to the matter of apparel, and all questions about it are answered.

Let every one but guard against the vanity of dress, let them but make their use of clothes a matter of confcience, let them but desire to make the best use of their money, and then every one has a rule that is sufficient to direct them in every state of life. This rule will no more let the great be vain in their dress, than intemperate in their liquors; and yet will leave it as lawful to have fome difference in their drink.

But now will you fay, that you may use the finest richest wines, when and as you please, that you may be as expensive in them as you have a mind, because different liquors are allowed? If not, how can it be said, that you may use clothes as you please, and wear the richest things you can get, because the bare difference of clothes as lawful?

For as the lawfulness of different liquors leaves no room, ner any excuse, for the smallest degree of intemperance in drinking; so the lawfulness of different apparel leaves no room, nor any excuse, for the smallest degrees of vanity, in drefs.

To ake what is vanity in drefs, is no more a puzzling queftion, than to ake, what is intemperance in drinking, And though religion does not here state the particular measure for all individuals, yet it gives such general rules as are a sufficient direction in every state of life.

He that lets religion teach him, that the end of drinking is only to far to refresh our spirits, as to keep us in good health, and make soul and body sitter for all the offices of a holy and picus life, and that he is to desire to glorify God by a right use of this liberty, will always know what intemperance is, in his particular state.

So he that lets religion teach him, that the end of cloathing is only to hide our shame and nakedness, and to secure our bodies from the injuries of weather, and that he is to defire to glorify God by a sober and wife use of this necessity, will always know what vanity of dress is,

And he that thinks it a needless nicety, to talk of the religious use of apparel, has as much reason to think it a needless nicety, to talk of the religious use of liquors. For luxury and indulgence in dress, is as great an abuse, as luxury and indulgence in eating and drinking. And there is no avoiding either of them, but by making religion the strict measure of our allowance in both cases. And there is nothing in religion to excite a man to this pious exactness in one case, but what is as good a motive to the same exactness in the other.

Farther, as all things that are lawful, are not therefore expedient; fo there are fome things lawful in the ufe of liquors and apparel, which by abstaining from them for pious ends, may be made means of great perfection.

Thus for instance, if a man should deny himself such use of liquors as is lawful: if he should refrain from such expence in his drink as might be allowed without sin; if he should do this, not only for the sake of a more pious self-denial, but that he might be able to relieve and refresh the helpless, poor, and sick.

If another should abstain from the use of that which is lawful in dress; if he should be more frugal and mean in his habit, than the necessities of religion absolutely require; if he should do this not only as a means of a better humility, but that he may be more able to clothe other people; these persons might be said to do that which was highly suitable to the true spirit, though not absolutely required by the letter of the law of Christ.

For if those who give a cup of cold water to a disciple of Christ, shall not lose their reward, how dear must they be to Christ, who often give themselves water, that they may be able to give wine to the sick and languishing members of Christ's body!

But to return. All that has been here faid to married women, may ferve for the fame instruction to such as are still under the direction of their parents.

Now though the obedience which is due to parents does not oblige them to carry their virtues any higher than their parents require them; yet their obedience requires them to fubmit to their direction in all things not contrary to the laws of God.

If therefore, your parents require you to live more in the fashion and conversation of the world, or to be more expensive in your dress and person, or to dispose of your time otherwise than suits with your desires after greater persection, you must submit, and bear it as your cross, till you are at liberty to sollow the higher counsels of Christ, and have it in your power to chuse the best ways of raising your virtue to its greatest height.

Now although whilft you are in this state, you may be E 5 obliged obliged to forego fome means of improving your virtue, yet there are fome others to be found in it, that are not to be had in a life of more liberty.

For if in this state, where obedience is so great a virtue, you comply in all things lawful, out of a pious, tender sense of duty; then those things which you thus perform, are, initead of being hindrances of your virtue, turned into means of improving it.

What you lose by being restrained from such things, as you would chuse to observe you gain by that excellent virtue of obedience, in humbly complying against your temper.

Now what is here granted, is only in things lawful; and therefore the divertion of our English stage is here excepted; being elsewhere proved, as I think, to be abfolutely unlawful.

Thus much to flew, how perfors under the direction of others, may imitate the wife and pious life of Miranda.

But as for those who are altogether in their own hands, if the liberty of their states makes them covet the best gifts, if it carries them to chuse the most excellent ways, if they, having all in their own power, should turn the whole form of their life into a regular exercise of the highest virtues, happy are they who have so learned Christ!

All persons cannot receive this saying. They that are ready to receive it, let them receive it, and bless that spirit of God which has put such good motions into their hearts.

God may be ferved and glorified in every state of life. But as there are some states of life more desirable than others, that more purify our natures, that more improve our virtues, and dedicate us unto God in a higher manner; so those, who are at liberty to chuse for themselves, seem to be called by God to be more eminently devoted to his service.

Ever fince the beginning of Christianity, there has been two orders or ranks of people amongst good Christians.

The one that feared and ferved God in the common offices of a fecular worldly life.

The

The other renouncing the common business and common enjoyments of life, as riches, marriage, honours, and pleasures, devoted themselves to voluntary poverty, virginity, devotion, and retirement, that by this means they might live wholly unto God in the daily exercise of a divine and heavenly life.

This testimony I have from the famous ecclesiastical historian, Eusebius, who lived at the time of the first general council, when the faith of our Nicene Creed was established, when the Church was in its greatest glory and purity, when its Bishops were so many holy fathers and eminent faints.

"Therefore, faith he, there hath been inftituted in the Church of Christ, two ways, or manners of living. The one raised above the ordinary state of nature, and common ways of living, rejects wedlock, possession, and worldly goods, and being wholly separate and removed from the ordinary conversation of common life, is appropriated and devoted solely to the worship and service of God, through an exceeding degree of heavenly love.

"They who are of this order of people, feem dead to the life of this world, and having their bedies only upon earth, are in their minds and contemplations dwelling in heaven. From whence, like many heavenly inhabitants, they look down upon human life, making interceffions and oblations to Almighty God for the whole race of mankind. And this not with the blood of beafts, or the fat, or fmoke, and burning of bodies, but with the higheft exercifes of true piety, with cleanfed and purified hearts, and with an whole form of life firielly devoted to virtue. Thefe are their factifices, which they continually offering unto God, implore his mercy and favour for themselves, and their fellow-creatures.

"Christianity receives this as the perfect manner of life.

"The other is of a lower form, and fuiting itself more to the condition of human nature, admits of chaste wedlock, and care of children and family, of trade and busness, and goes through all the employments of life under a fense of piety, and sear of God.

"Now they who have chosen this manner of life, have E 6 their their fet times for retirement and spiritual exercises, and particular days are set apart for their hearing and learning the word of God. And this order of people are considered, as in the second state of piety." Eusub. Dem. Exam. 1. 1. c. 8.

Thus this learned historian.

If therefore perfons of either fex, moved with the life of Miranda, and defirous of perfection, should unite themselves into little societies, professing voluntary poverty, virginity, retirement and devotion, living upon bare necessaries, that some might be relieved by their charities, and all be blessed with their prayers, and benefited by their example: or if for want of this, they should practife the same manner of life, in as high a degree as they could by themselves; such persons would be so far from being chargeable with any superstition, or blind devotion, that they might be justly said to restore that piety, which was the boast and glory of the Church, when its greatest faints were alive.

Now as this learned historian observes, that it was an exceeding great degree of heavenly love, that carried these persons so much above the common ways of life, to such an eminent state of holiness; so it is not to be wondered at, that the religion of Jesus Christ should fill the hearts of many Christians with this high degree

For a religion that opens such a scene of glory, that discovers things so infinitely above all the world, that so triumphs over death, that assures us of such mansions of blifs, where we shall so soon be as the Angels of God in heaven; what wonder is it, if such a religion, such truths and expectations, should in some holy souls, detroy all earthly desires, and make the ardent love of heavenly things, be the one continual passion of their hearts?

If the religion of Christians is founded upon the infinite humiliation, the cruel mockings and scourgings, the prodigious sufferings, the poor, persecuted life, and painful death of a crucified Son of God; what wonder is it, if many humble adorers of this profound mystery, many affectionate lovers of a crucified Lord, should renounce their share of worldly pleasures, and give them-

felves up to a continual course of mortification, and self-denial: that thus suffering with Christ here, they may reign with him hereafter?

If truth itself hath assured us, that there is but one thing needful, what wonder is it, that there should be some amongst Christians so full of saith, as to believe this in the highest sense of the words, and to desire such a separation from the world, that there care and attention to the one thing needful may not be interrupted?

If our bleffed Lord hath faid, If theu wilt be perfect, go and fell that then haft, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow we: What wonder is it, that there should be amongst Christians, some such zealous followers of Christ, so intent upon heavenly treasure, so desirous of perfection, that they should renounce the enjoyment of their estates, chuse a voluntary poverty, and relieve all the poor that they are able?

If the chosen vessel, St Paul, hath said, He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord; and that there is this difference also between a wife and a wirgin; the unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit: What wonder is it, if the purity and persection of the virgin state, hath been the praise and glory of the church in its first and purest ages?

That there hath always been some so desirous of pleasing God, so zealous after every degree of purity and perfection, so glad of every means of improving their virtue, that they have renounced the comforts and enjoyments of wedlock, to trim their lamps, to purify their souls, and wait upon God in a state of perpetual

And if now in these our days, we want examples of these several degrees of perfection; if neither clergy nor laity are enough of this spirit; if we are so far departed from it, that a man seems, like St Paul at Athens, a setter forth of strange doctrines, when he recommends selfdenial, renunciation of the world, regular devotion, retirement, virginity, and voluntary poverty, 'tis because we are fallen into an age, where the love not only of many, but of most, is waxed cold.

I have

I have made this little appeal to antiquity, and quoted these few passages of Scripture, to support some uncommon practices in the life of Miranda; and to shew, that her highest rules of holy living, her devotion, self-denial, renunciation of the world, her charity, virginity, and voluntary poverty, are founded in the sublimest counsels of Christ and his Apostles, suitable to the high expectations of another life, proper instances of a heavenly love, and all followed by the greatest saints of the best and purest ages of the church.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

CHAP. X.

Shewing how all orders and ranks of men and woman of all ages, are obliged to devote themselves unto God.

HAVE in the foregoing chapters gone through the feveral great instances of Christian devotion, and shewn that all the parts of our common life, our employments, our talents and gifts of fortune, are all to be made holy and acceptable unto God, by a wise and religious use of every thing, and by directing our actions and defigns to such ends as are suitable to the honour and glory of God.

I shall now shew, that this regularity of devotion, this holiness of common life, this religious use of every thing that we have, is a devotion that is the duty of all orders of Christian people.

Fulvius has had a learned education, and taken his degrees in the University, he came from thence, that he might be free from any rules of life. He takes no employment upon him, nor enters into any business, because he thinks that every employment or business, calls people to the careful performance and discharge of its several duties. When he is grave, he will tell you that he did not enter into holy orders, because he looks upon it to be a state, that requires great holiness of life, and that it does not suit his temper to be so good. He will tell you that he never intends to marry, because he cannot oblige himself to that regularity of life, and good behaviour, which he takes to be the duty of those that are at the head of a family. He refused to be Godfather to his nephew, because he will have no trust of any kind to answer for.

Fulvius thinks that he is conscientious in this conduct, and is therefore content with the most idle, impertinent and careless life.

He has no religion, no devotion, no pretences to piety. He lives by no rules, and thinks all is very well, because he is neither a priest nor a father, nor a guardian, nor has any employment or family to look after.

But Fulvius, you are a rational creature, and as fuch, are as much obliged to live according to reason and order as a priest is obliged to attend at the altar, or a guardian to be faithful to his trust; if you live contrary to reason, you don't commit a small crime, you don't break a small trust; but you break the law of your nature, you rebel against God who gave you that nature, and put your-felf amongst those whom the God of reason and order will punish as apostates and deserters.

Though you have no employment, yet as you are baptized into the profession of Christ's religion, you are as much obliged to live according to the holiness of the Christian spirit, and perform all the promises made at your baptism, as any man is obliged to be honest and faithful in his calling. If you abuse this great calling, you are not false in a small matter, but you abuse the precious blood of Christ; you crucify the Son of God afresh; you neglect the highest instances of divine goodness; you disgrace the church of God; you blemish the body of Christ; you abuse the means of grace, and the promises of glory; and it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for you.

It is therefore great folly, for any one to think himfelf at liberty to live as he pleases, because he is not in such a state of life as some others are: For if there is any thing dreadful in the abuse of any trust; if there is any thing to be feared for the neglect of any calling, there is nothing more to be feared than the wrong use of our reason, nor any thing more to be dreaded, than the neglect of our Christian calling; which is not to serve the little uses of a short life, but to redeem souls unto

God, to fill heaven with faints, and finish a kingdom of eternal glory unto God.

No man therefore must think himself excused from the exactness of piety and morality, because he has chosen to be idle and independant in the world; for the necessiaties of a reasonable and holy life, are not founded in the feveral conditions and employments of this life, but in the immutable nature of God, and the nature of man. A man is not to be reasonable and holy, because he is a priest, or a father of a family; but he is to be a pious priest, and a good father, because piety and goodness are the laws of human nature. Could any man please God, without living according to reason and order, there would be nothing displeasing to God in an idle priest, or a reprobate father. He therefore that abuses his reason, is like him that abuses the priesthood; and he that neglects the holiness of the Christian life, is as the man that disregards the most important trust.

If a man was to chuse to put out his eyes, rather than enjoy the light, and see the works of God; if he should voluntarily kill himself, by refusing to eat and drink, every one would own, that such a one was a rebel against God, that justly deserved his highest indignation. You would not say, that this was only sinful in a priest, or a master of a family, but in every man as such.

Now wherein does the finfulness of this behaviour consist? Does it not consist in this, that he abuses his nature, and refuses to act that part for which God had created him? But if this be true, then all persons that abuse their reason, that act a different part from that for which God created them, are like this man, rebels against God, and on the same account subject to his wrath.

Let us suppose, that this man, instead of putting out his eyes, had only employed them in looking at ridiculous things, or shut them up in a sleep; that instead of starving himself to death, by not eating at all, he should turn every meal into a feast, and eat and drink like an Epicure; could he be said to have lived more to the glory of God? could he any more be said to act the part for which God had created him, than if he had put out his eyes, and starved himself to death?

Now

Now do but suppose a man acting unreasonably; do but suppose him extinguishing his reason, instead of putting out his eyes; and living in a course of folly and impertinence, initead of starving himself to death; and then you have sound out as great a rebel against God.

For he that puts out his eyes, or murders himfelf, has only this guilt, that he abuses the powers that God has given him; that he refuses to act that part for which he was created, and puts himself into a state that is contrary to the divine will. And surely this is the guilt of every one that lives an unreasonable, unholy,

As therefore, no particular state, or private life, is an excuse for the abuse of our bodies, or self-murder; so no particular state, or private life, is an excuse for the abuse of our reason, or the neglect of the holiness of the Christian religion. For surely it is as much the will of God, that we should make the best use of our rational faculties, that we should conform to the purity and holiness of Christianity, as it is the will of God, that we should use our eyes, and eat and drink for the preservation of our lives.

Till therefore a man can flow, that he fincerely endeavours to live according to the will of God, to be that which God requires him to be; till he can flow, that he is firiving to live according to the holiness of the Chriftian religion; whofoever he be, or wherefoever he be, he has all that to answer for, that they have, who refuse to live, who abuse the greatest trusts, and negical

Every body acknowledges, that all orders of men are to be equally and exactly honest and fairhful; there is no exception to be made in these duties, for any private or particular state of life. Now if we would but attend to the reason and nature of things; if we would but consider the nature of God, and the nature of man, we should find the same necessity for every other right use of our reason, for every grace, or religious temper of the Christian life: we should find it as absurd to suppose, that one man must be exact in piety, and another need not, as to suppose that one man must be exact in honesty, but another need not. For Christian humility, sobriety,

parts of a reasonable life, as justice and honesty.

And on the other hand, pride fenfuality and covetoufness, are as great disorders of the foul, are as high an abuse of our reason, and as contrary to God, as cheating and dishonesty.

Theft and diffionefty feem indeed, to vulgar eyes, to be greater fins, because they are so hurtful to civil so-ciety, and are so feverely punished by human laws.

But if we consider mankind in a higher view, as God's order or society of rational beings, that are to glorify him by the right use of their reason, and by acting conformably to the order of their nature, we shall find, that every temper that is equally contrary to reason and order, that opposes God's ends and designs, and disorders the beauty and glory of the rational world, is equally sinful in man, and equally odious to God. This would shew us, that the sin of sentuality is like the sin of dishonesty, and renders us as great objects of the divine

Again, if we confider mankind in a farther view, as a redeemed order of fallen spirits, that are baptized into a fellowship with the Son of God; to be temples of the Holy Ghost; to live according to his holy inspirations; to offer to God the reasonable sacrifice of an humbte, pious, and thankful life; to purify themselves from the disorders of their fuil; to make a right use of the means of grace, in order to be fons of eternal glory; If we look at mankind in this true light, then we shall find that all tempers that are contrary to this holy fociety, that are abuses of this infinite mercy; all actions that make us unlike to Christ, that difgrace his body, that abuse the means of grace, and oppose our hopes of glory, have every thing in them, that can make us for ever odious unto God. So that though pride and fenfuality, and other vices of the like kind, do not hurt civil fociety, as cheating and difhonesty do, yet they hurt that fociety, and oppose those ends, which are greater and more glorious in the eyes of God, than all the focieties that relate to this world.

Nothing therefore can be more false, than to imagine, that because we are private persons, that have taken upon us no charge or employment of life, that therefore we may live more at large, indulge our appetites, and be lefs careful of the duties of piety and holiness; for it is as good an excuse for cheating and dishonesty. Because he that abuses his reason, that indulges himself in lust and sensuality, and neglects to act the wife and reasonable part of a true Christian, has every thing in his life to render him hateful to God, that is to be found in cheating and dishonesty.

If therefore you rather chuse to be an idle Epicure, than to be unfaithful; if you rather chuse to live in lust and sensuality, than to injure your neighbour in his goods, you have made no better a provision for the favour of God, than he that rather chuses to rob a house,

For the abufing of our own nature, is as great a disobedience against God, as the injuring our neighbour; and he that wants piety towards God, has done as much to damn himself, as he that wants honesty towards men. Every argument therefore, that proves it necessary for all men, in all stations of life, to be truly honest, proves it equally necessary for all men, in all stations of life, to be truly holy and pious, and do all things in such a manner, as is suitable to the glory of God.

Again, another argument to prove that all orders of men are obliged to be thus hely and devout in the common course of their lives, in the use of every thing that they enjoy, may be taken from our obligation to prayer.

It is granted, that prayer is a duty that belongs to all flates and conditions of incn; now if we enquire into the reason of this, why no state of life is to be excused from prayer, we shall find it as good a reason, why every state of life is to be made a state of piety and holiness in all its parts.

For the reason why we are to pray unto God, and praise him with hymns, and psalms of thanksgiving! is this, because we are to live wholly unto God, and glorify him all possible ways. It is not because the praises of words, or forms of thanksgiving, are more particularly parts of piety, or more the worthip of God than other things; but it is because they are possible ways of expressing our dependence, our obedience and devotion to God. Now if this be the reason of verbal praises and

thankfgivings to God, because we are to live unto God all possible ways, then it plainly follows, that we are equally obliged to worship, and glorify God in all other actions, that can be turned into acts of piety and obedience to him. And as actions are of much more fignificancy than words, it must be a much more acceptable worship of God, to glorify him in all the actions of our common life, than with any little form of words at any particular times.

Thus, if God is to be worshipped with forms of thanksgiving, he that makes it a rule to be content and thanksul in every part and accident of his life, because it comes from God, praises God in a much higher manner, than he that has some set time for singing of psalms. He that dares not say an ill-natured word, or do an unreasonable thing, because he considers God as every where present, performs a better devotion than he that dares not miss the Church. To live in the world as a stranger and a pilgrim, using all its enjoyments as if we used them not, making all our actions so many steps towards a better life, is offering a better facrifice to God, than any forms of hely and heavenly prayers.

To be humble in all our actions, to avoid every appearance of pride and vanity, to be meek and lowly in our words, actions, drefs, behaviour and defigns, in imitation of our biefiel Saviour, is worshipping God in a higher manner, than they who have only times to fall low on their knees in devotion. He that contents himfelf with necessaries, that he may give the remainder to those that want it; that dates not to spend any money soolidaly, because he considers it as a talent from God, which must be used according to his will, praises God with something that is more giorious than songs of praise.

He that has appointed times for the use of wife and pious prayers, performs a proper inflance of devotion; but he that allows himself no times, nor any places, nor any actions, but such as are strictly conformable to wisdom and holiness, worships the divine nature with the most true and substantial devotion. For who does not know, that it is better to be pure and holy, than to talk about purity and holiness? Nay, who does not know, that a man is to be reckoned no farther pure, or holy, or institute.

just, than as he is pure, and holy, and just in the common course of his life? But if this be plain, then it is also plain, that it is better to be holy, than to have holy prayers.

Prayers therefore are so far from being a sufficient devotion, that they are the smallest parts of it. We are to praise God with words and prayers, because it is a possible way of glorifying God, who has given us such faculties, as may be so used. But then as words are but small things in themselves, as times of prayer are but little, if compared with the rest of our lives; so that devotion which consists in times and forms of prayer, is but a very small thing, if compared to that devotion which is to appear in every other part and circumstance of our lives.

Again; as it is an eafy thing to worship God with forms of words, and to observe times of offering them unto him, fo it is the fmalleit kind of piety.

And on the other hand, as it is more difficult to worfhip God with our fubstance, to honour him with the right use of our time, to offer to him the continual facrifice of self-denial and mortification; as it requires more piety to eat and drink only for such ends as may glorify God, to undertake no labour, ner allow of any diverfion, but where we can act in the name of God; as it is most dissipations, and make piety to God the rule and measure of all the actions of our common life; so the devotion of this kind is a much more acceptable service unto God, than those words of devotion which we offer to him either in the Church, or in our closet.

Every fober reader will easily perceive, that I don't intend to lessen the true and great value of prayers, either public or private; but only to shew him, that they are certainly but a very slender part of devotion, when compared to a devout life.

To fee this in a yet clearer light, let us suppose a perfon to have appointed times for praising God with psalms and hymns, and to be strict in the observation of them; let it be supposed also, that in his common life he is restless and uneasy, full of murmurings and complaints at every thing, never pleased but by chance, as his temper happens to carry him, but murmuring and repining at the very feafons, and having fomething to diflike in every thing that happens to him. Now can you conceive any thing more abfurd and unreasonable, than fuch a character as this? Is such a one to be reckoned thankful to God, because he has forms of praise which he offers to him? Nay, is it not certain, that such forms of praise must be so far from being an acceptable devotion to God, that they must be abhor'd as an abomination? Now the absurdity which you see in this instance, is the same in any other part of our life; if our common life hath any contrariety to our prayers, it is the same abomination, as songs of thanksgiving in the mouths of murmurers.

Bended knees, whilst you are cloathed with pride; heavenly petitions, whilst you are hoarding up treasures upon earth; holy devotions, whilst you live in the follies of the world; prayers of meekaes and charity, whilst your heart is the feat of spite and resentment; hours of prayer, whilst you give up days and years to idle diversions, impertinent visits, and soolish pleasures; are as absurd, unacceptable service to God, as forms of thanksgiving from a person that lives in repinings and discon-

So that unless the common course of our lives be according to the common spirit of our prayers, our prayers are so far from being a real or sufficient degree of devotion, that they become an empty lip-labour, or, what is worfe, a notorious hypocrify.

Seeing therefore we are to make the spirit and temper of our prayers the common spirit and temper of our lives, this may serve to convince us, that all orders of people are to labour and aspire after the same utmost perfection of the Christian life. For as all Christians are to use the same holy and heavenly devotions, as they are all with the same earnestness to pray for the Spirit of God; so is it a sufficient proof, that all orders of people are, to the utmost of their power, to make their life agreeable to that one Spirit, for which they are all to pray.

As certain therefore as the fame holiness of prayers requires requires the same holiness of life, so certain is it, that all Christians are called to the same holiness of life.

A foldier, or a tradefman, is not called to minister at the altar, or preach the gospel; but every foldier or tradefman is as much obliged to be devout, humble, holy, and heavenly-minded in all the parts of his common life, as a clergyman is obliged to be zealous, faithful, and laborious in all parts of his profession.

And all this, for this one plain reason, because all people are to pray for the same holiness, wisdom, and divine tempers, and to make themselves as fit as they can for the fame heaven.

All men therefore, as men, have one and the fame important bufiness, to act up to the excellency of their rational nature, and to make reason and order the law of all their designs and actions. All Christians, as Christians, have one and the same calling, to live according to the excellency of the Christian spirit, and to make the sublime precepts of the gospel, the rule and measure of all their tempers in common life. The one thing needful to one, is the one thing needful to all.

The merchant is no longer to hoard up treasures upon earth; the foldier is no longer to fight for glory; the great scholar is no longer to pride himself in the depths of science; but they must all with one spirit count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ

Fefus.

The fine lady must teach her eyes to weep, and be cloathed with humility. The polite gentleman must exchange the gay thoughts of wit and tancy, for a broken and a contrite heart. The man of quality must so far renounce the dignity of his birth, as to think himself miserable till he is born again. Servants must consider their service as done unto God. Masters must consider their fervants as their brethren in Christ, that are to be treated as their sellow members of the mystical body of Christ.

Young Ladies must either devote themselves to piety, prayer, ielf-denial, and all good works, in a virgin state of life; or else marry to be holy, sober, and prudent in the care of a family, bringing up their children in piety, humility and devotion, and abounding in all other good works, works, to the utmost of their state and capacity. They have no choice of any thing else, but must devote themselves to God in one of these states. They may chuse a married or a single life; but it is not lest to their choice, whether they will make either state a state of holiness, humility, devotion, and all other duties of the christian life. It is no more lest in their power, because they have fortunes, or are born of rich parents, to divide themselves betwirk God and the world, or take such pleasures as their fortunes would afford them, that it is allowable for them to be sometimes chaste and modest, and sometimes not.

They are not to confider how much religion may fecure them a fair character, or how they may add devotion to an impertinent, vain, and giddy life; but must look into the spirit and temper of their prayers, into the nature and end of Christianity, and then they will find, that whether married or unmarried, they have but one business upon their hands, to be wise and pious, and holy, not in little modes and forms of worship; but in the whole turn of their minds, in the whole form of all their behaviour, and in the daily course of their common life.

Young gentlemen must consider, what our blessed Saviour said to the young gentlemen in the gospel, he bid him fell all that he had and give it to the poor. Now though this text should not oblige all people to sell all, yet it certainly obliges all kinds of people to employ all their estates in such wise and reasonable and charitable ways, as may sufficiently shew that all that they have is devoted to God, and that no part of it is kept from the poor to be spent in needless, vain, and soolish expences.

If therefore young gentlemen propose to themselves a life of pleasure and indulgence, if they spend their estates in a high living, in luxury and intemperance, in state and equipage, in pleasures and diversions, in sports and gaming, and such like wanton gratifications of their teolish passions, they have as much reason to look upon themselves to be angels, as to be disciples of Christ.

Let them be affured, that it is the one only bufiness of a christian gentleman, to distinguish himself by good works, to be eminent in the most sublime virtues of the gospel, to bear with the ignorance and weakness of the vulgar, to be a friend and patron to all that dwell about him, to live in the utmost heights of wildom and holiness, and shew through the whole course of his life a true religious greatness of mind. They must aspire after fuch a gentility, as they might have learnt from feeing the bleffed Jesus, and shew no other spirit of a gentleman, but fuch as they might have got by living with the holy apostles. They must learn to love God with all their heart, with all their foul, and with all their ftrength, and their neighbour as themselves; and then they have all the greatness and diffinction that they can have here, and are fit for an eternal happiness in heaven hereafter.

Thus in all orders and conditions either of men or women, this is the one common holinefs, which is to be the common life of all Christians.

The merchant is not to leave devotion to the clergyman, nor the ciergyman to leave humility to the labourer; women of fortune are not to leave it to the poor of their fex, to be difcreet, chafte keepers at home, to adorn themselves in modelt apparel, shamefacedness and sobriety; nor poor women leave it to the rich to attend on the worship and service of God. Great men must be eminent for true poverty of spirit, and people of a low and afflicted flate must greatly rejoice in God.

The man of strength and power is to forgive and pray for his enemies, and the innocent sufferer that is chained in prison, must with Paul and Silus, at midnight sing praise to God. For God is to be glorified, holiness is to be practifed, and the spirit of religion is to be the common spirit of every christian in every state and condition of life.

For the fon of God did not come from above, to add an external form of worship to the feveral ways of life that are in the world; and fo to leave people to live as they did before, in fuch tempers and enjoyments as the fashion and spirit of the world approves. But as he came down from heaven, altogether divine and heavenly in his own nature, fo it was to call mankind to a divine and heavenly life; to the highest change of their whole nature and temper; to be born again of the holy Spirit; to walk in the wisdom and light and love of God; and be like him to the utmost of their power; to renounce all the most plausible ways of the world, whether of greatness, business, or pleasure; to a mortification of all their most agreeable passions; and to live in such wisdom, and purity, and holiness, as might fit them to be glorious in the enjoyment of God to all eternity.

Whatever therefore is foolish, ridiculous, vain, or earthly, or fensual in the life of a christian, is something that ought not to be there, it is a spot and a defilement that must be washed away with tears of repentance. But if any thing of this kind runs through the course of our whole life, if we allow ourselves in things, that are either vain, foolish or sensual, we renounce our profession.

For as fure as Jesus Christ was wisdom and holiness, as sure as he came to make us like himself, and to be baptized into his spirit, so sure is it, that none can be said to keep to their christian profession, but they, who to the utmost of their power live a wise and holy and heavenly life. This, and this alone, is Christianity, an universal holiness in every part of life, a heavenly wisdom in all our actions, not conforming to the spirit and temper of the world, but turning all worldly enjoyments into means of piety and devotion to God.

But now if this devout state of heart, if these habits of inward holiness be true religion, then true religion is equally the duty and happiness of all orders of men; for there is nothing to recommend it to one, that is not the same recommendation of it to all states of people.

If it be the happiness and glory of a bishop to live in this devout spirit, sull of these holy tempers, doing every thing as unto God, it is as much the glory and happiness of all men and women, whether young or old, to live in the same spirit. And whoever can find any reasons, why an ancient bishop should be intent upon divine things, turning all his life into the highest exercises of piety, wisdom and devotion, will find them so many reasons, why he should to the utmost of his power do the same himself.

If you fay, that a bishop must be an eminent example of Christian holiness, because of his high and facred calling, you say right. But if you say that it is more to his advantage to be exemplary, than it is yours, you greatly mistake. For there is nothing to make the highest degrees of holiness desireable to a bishop, but what makes them equally defireable to every young person of every family.

For an exalted piety, high devotion, and the religious use of every thing, is as much the glory and happiness of one state of life, as it is of another.

Do but fancy in your mind what a spirit of piety you would have in the best bishop in the world, how you would have him love God, how you would have him imitate the life of our Saviour and his apostles, how you would have him live above the world, shining in all the inftances of a heavenly life, and then you have found out that spirit, which you ought to make the spirit of your own life.

I defire every reader to dwell a while upon this reflection, and perhaps he will find more conviction from it, than he imagines. Every one can tell how good and pious he would have fome people to be; every one knows how wife and reasonable a thing it is in a bishop, to be entirely above the world, and be an example of christian perfection: As foon as you think of a wife and ancient bithop, you fancy fome exalted degree of piety, a living example of all those holy tempers, which you find defcribed in the gospel.

Now if you ask yourself, what is the happiest thing for a young clergyman to do? You must be forced to anfwer, that nothing can be so happy and glorious for him, as to be like that excellent holy bishop.

If you go on, and ask what is the happiest thing for any young gentleman or his fifters to do? The answer must be the same; that nothing can be so happy or glorious for them, as to live in fuch habits of piety, in fuch exercifes of a divine life, as this good old bishop does. For every thing that is great and glorious in religion, is as much the true glory of every man or woman, as it is the glory of any bishop. If high degrees of divine love, if fervent charity, if spotless purity, if heavenly affection, if constant mortification, if frequent devotion be the best and happieft way of life for any christian; it is fo for every christian. F 2

Con-

Confider again; if you was to fee a bishop in the whole course of his life, living below his character, conforming to all the soolish tempers of the world, and governed by the same cares and sears which govern vain and worldly men, what would you think of him? Would you think that he was only guilty of a small mistake? No: you would condemn him, as erring in that which is not only the most, but the only important matter that relates to him. Stay a while in this consideration, till your mind is fully convinced, how miserable a mistake it is in a bithop, to live a carelefs, worldly life.

Whilst you are thinking in this manner, turn your thoughts towards fome of your acquaintance, your brother or fifter, or any young person. Now if you see the common course of their lives to be not according to the doctrines of the gotpel, if you fee that their way of life cannot be faid to be a fincere endeavour to enter in at the ftraight gate, you see fomething that you are to condemn in the fame degree, and for the fame reasons. They do not commit a small mistake, but are wrong in that which is their all, and millake their true happiness, as much as that bishop does, who neglects the high duties of his calling. Apply this reasoning to yourfelf; if you find yourfelf living an idle, indulgent, vain life, chuting rather to gratify your pallions, than to live up to the doctrines of Christianity, and practife the plain precepts of our bleffed Lord, you have all that blindness and unreasonableness to charge upon your felf, that you can charge upon any irregular bithop.

For all the virtues of the Christian life, its perfect purity, its heavenly tempers, are as much the sole rule of your life, as the sole rule of the life of a bishop. If you neglect these holy tempers if you do not eagerly aspire after them, if you do not shew yourself a visible example of them, you are as much fallen from your true sappiness, you are as great an enemy to yourself, and have made as bad a choice, as that bishop that chuses rather to enrich his family, than to be like an apostle. For there is no reason, why you should think the highest hostiness the most heavenly tempers, to be the duty and happiness of a bishop; but what is as good a reason, why you should think the same tempers, to be the duty and happiness happiness of all christians. And as the wifest bishop in the world, is he, who lives in the greatest heights of holiness, who is most exemplary in all the exercises of a divine life, so the wifest youth, the wifest woman, whether married or unmarried, is she, that lives in the highest degrees of Christian holiness, and all the exercises of a divine and heavenly life.

CHAP. XI.

Shewing how great devotion fills our lives with the greatest peace and happiness, that can be enjoyed in this world.

SOME people will perhaps object, that all these rules of holy living unto God in all that we do, are too great a restraint upon human life; that it will be made too anxious a state, by thus introducing a regard to God in all our actions. And that by depriving ourselves of so many spemingly innocent pleasures, we shall render our lives dull, uneasy, and melancholy.

To which it may be answered:

First, That these rules are prescribed for, and will certainly procure a quite contrary end. That instead of making our lives dull and melancholy, they will render them full of content and strong satisfactions. That by these rules we only change the childs satisfactions of our vain and sickly passions, for the folid enjoyments, and real happiness of a found mind.

Secondly, That as there is no foundation for comfort in the enjoyments of this life, but in the affurance that a wife and good God governeth the world, fo the more we find out God in every thing, the more we apply to him in every place, the more we look up to him in all our actions, the more we conform to his will, the more we act according to his wifdom, and imitate his goodness, by so much the more do we enjoy God, partake of the divine nature, and heighten and increase all that is happy and comfortable in human life.

Thirdly, He that is endeavouring to fubdue and root out of his mind all those passions of pride, envy, and ambition, which religion opposes, is doing more to make himself happy, even in this life, than he that is contriving means to indulge them.

For these passions are the causes of all the disquiets and vexations of human life: they are the dropsies and severs of our minds, vexing them with false appetites, and restless cravings after such things as we do not want, and spoiling our taste for those things which are our proper good.

Do but imagine that you some where or other saw a man that proposed reason as the rule of all his actions, that had no desires but after such things as nature wants, and religion approves, that was as pure from all the motions of pride, envy, and covetousness, as from thoughts of murder; that in this freedom from worldly passions, he had a foul full of divine love, wishing and praying that all men may have what they want of worldly things, and be partakers of eternal glory in the life to come.

Do but fancy a man living in this manner, and your own confcience will immediately tell you, that he is the happiest man in the world, and that it is not in the power of the richest fancy to invent any higher happiness in the present state of life.

And on the other hand, if you suppose him to be in any degree less perfect; if you suppose him but subject to one soolish fondness, or vain passion, your own confcience will again tell you, that he so far lessens his own happiness, and robs himself of the true enjoyment of his other virtues. So true is it, that the more we live by the rules of religion, the more peaceful and happy do we render our lives.

Again, as it thus appears, that real happiness is only to be had from the greatest degrees of piety, the greatest denials of our passions, and the strictest rules of religion, so the same truth will appear from a consideration of human misery. If we look into the world, and view the disquiets and troubles of human life, we shall find that they are all owing to our violent and irreligious passions.

Now all trouble and uneafiness is founded in the want of something or other; would we therefore know the true cause of our troubles and disquiets, we must find out the cause of our wants; because that which creates and increaseth our wants, does in the same degree create and increase our trouble and disquiets.

God Almighty has fent us into the world with very few wants; meat, and drink, and cloathing, are the only things necessary in life; and as these are only our present needs, so the present world is well furnished to supply these needs.

If a man had half the world in his power, he can make no more of it than this; as he wants it only to support an animal life, so it is unable to do any thing else for him, or to afford him any other happiness.

This is the state of man, born with few wants, and into a large world, very capable of supplying them. So that one would reasonably suppose, that men should pass their lives in content and thankfulness to God, at least that they should be free from violent disquiets and vexations, as being placed in a world, that has more than enough to relieve all their wants.

But if to all this we add, that this short life, thus furnished with all that we want in it, is only a short passage to eternal glory, where we shall be cloathed with the brightness of angels, and enter into the joys of God, we might still more reasonably expect, that human life should be a state of peace, and joy, and delight in God. Thus it would certainly be, if reason had its full power over us.

But alas, though God, and nature, and reason, make human life thus free from wants, and so full of happiness, yet our passions, in rebellion against God, against nature and reason, create a new world of evils, and fill human life with imaginary wants, and vain disquiets.

The man of pride has a thousand wants, which only his own pride has created; and these render him as sull of trouble, as if God had created him with a thousand appetites, without creating any thing that was proper to satisfy them. Envy and ambition have also their endless wants, which disquiet the souls of men, and by their contradictory motions, render them as foolishly miferable, as those that want to sly and creep at the same time.

Let but any complaining, difquieted man tell you the ground of his uneafiness, and you will plainly see, that he is the author of his own torment; that he is vexing himself at some imaginary evil, which will cease to torment him, as soon as he is content to be that which God, and nature, and reason require him to be.

If you should see a man passing his days in disquiet, because he could not walk upon the water, or catch birds as they sly by him, you would readily confess, that such a one might thank himself for such uneasiness. But now if you look into all the most tormenting disquiets of life, you will find them all thus absurd; where people are only termented by their own folly, and vexing themselves at such things as no more concern them, nor are any more their proper good, than walking upon the water, or catching birds.

What can you conceive more filly and extravagant, than to suppose a man racking his brains, and studying night and day how to sly? wandering from his own house and home, wearying himself with climbing upon every afcent, cringing and courting every body he meets, to lift him up from the ground, bruising himself with continual falls, and at last breaking his neck? And all this, from an imagination that it would be glorious to have the eyes of people gazing up at him, and mighty happy to eat, and drink, and sleep, at the top of the highest trees in the kingdom. Would you not readily own, that such a one was only disquieted by his own folly?

If you ask, what it fignifies to suppose such filly creatures as these, as are no where to be found in human life?

It may be answered, that wherever you see an ambitious man, there you see this vain and senseless flyer.

Again, if you should see a man that had a large pond of water, yet living in continual thirst, not suffering himself to drink half a draught, for sear of lessening his pond; if you should see him wasting his time and strength, in setching more water to his pond, always thirsty, yet always carrying a bucket of water in his hand, watching early and late to catch the drops of rain, gaping after every cloud, and running greedily into every mire and mud, in hopes of water, and always studying how to make every ditch empty itself into his pond. If you should see him grow grey and old in these anxious labours, and at last end a careful, thirsty life, by falling into his own pond, would you not say that such a one was not only the author of all his own disquiets, but was foolish enough to be reckoned amongst ideots and madmen? But yet foolish and absurd as this character is, it does not represent half the follies, and absurd disquiets, of the covetous man.

I could now eafily proceed to flow the fame effects of all our other passions; and make it plainly appear, that all our miseries, vexations, and complaints, are entirely of our own making, and that in the same absurd manner, as in these instances of the covetous and ambitious man. Look where you will, you will see all worldly vexations but like the vexation of him, that was always in mire and mud in search of water to drink, when he had more at home than was sufficient for an hundred horses.

Cælia is always telling you how provoked she is, what intolerable shocking things happen to her, what monftrous usage the fuffers, and what vexations the meets with every where. She tells you that her patience is quite wore out, and there is no bearing the behaviour of people. Every affembly that she is at, sends her home provoked; fomething or other has been faid or done, that no reasonable, well-bred person ought to bear. Poor people that want her charity, are fent away with halty answers, not because she has not a heart to part with any money, but because she is too full of some trouble of her own, to attend the complaints of others. Cælia has no bufine's upon her hands, but to receive the income of a plentiful fortune; but yet by the doleful turn of her mind, you would be apt to think, that she had neither food nor lodging. If you fee her look more pale than ordinary, if her lips tremble when the fpeaks to you, it is because she is just come from a visit, where Lupus took no notice at all of her, but talked all the time to Lucinda, who has not half her fortune. When cross accidents have fo difordered her spirits, that she is forced to fend for the Doctor to make her able to eat; she tells shim, in great anger at providence, that she never was well fince she was born, and that she envies every beggar that she sees in health.

This is the difquiet life of Cælia, who has nothing to torment her but her own spirit.

If you would inspire her with a Christian humility, you need do no more to make her happy as any person in the world. This virtue would make her thankful to God for half fo much health as she has had, and help her to enjoy more for the time to come. This virtue would keep off tremblings of the spirits, and loss of appetite, and her blood would need nothing elfe to fweeten it.

I have just touched upon these absurd characters for no other end, but to convince you in the plainest manner, that the strictest rules of religion are so far from rendering a life dull, anxious, and uncomfortable (as is above objected) that, on the contrary, all the miferies, vexations, and complaints that are in the world, are all owing to the want of religion; being directly caused by those absurd passions, which religion teaches us to deny.

For all the wants which difturb human life, which make us uneafy to ourfelves, quarrelfome with others, and unthankful to God; which weary us in vain labours and foelish anxieties; which carry us from project to project, from place to place, in a poor purfuit of we don't know what, are the wants which neither God, nor nature, nor reason hath subjected us to, but are solely infused into us, by pride, envy, ambition, and covetousnefs.

So far therefore as you reduce your defires to fuch things as nature and reason require; so far as you regulate all the motions of your heart by the strict rules of religion, so far you remove yourself from that infinity of wants and vexations, which torment every heart that is left to itfelf.

Most people indeed confess, that religion preserves us from a great many evils, and helps us in many respects to a more happy enjoyment of ourfelves; but then they imagine, that this is only true of fuch a moderate share of religion, as only gently restrains us from the excesses of our passions. They suppose that the strict rules and restraints of an exalted piety, are such contradictions to our nature, as must needs make our lives dull and uncomfortable.

Although the weakness of this objection sufficiently appears from what hath been already said, yet I shall add one word more to it.

This objection supposes, that religion, moderately practifed, adds much to the happiness of life; but that such height of piety as the perfection of religion requir-eth, have a contrary effect.

It supposes therefore, that it is happy to be kept from the excesses of envy, but unhappy to be kept from other degrees of envy; that it is happy to be delivered from a boundless ambition, but unhappy to be without a more moderate ambition. It supposes also, that the happiness of life consists in a mixture of ambition, and humility, charity and envy, heavenly affection and covetousness. All which is as absurd, as to suppose that it is happy to be free from excessive pains, but unhappy to be without more moderate pains; or that the happiness of health consisted in being partly sick, and partly well.

For if humility be the peace and rest of the soul, then no one has so much happiness from humility, as he that is the most humble. If excessive envy is a torment of the soul, he most perfectly delivers himself from torment, that most perfectly extinguishes every spark of envy. If there is any peace and joy in doing any action according to the will of God, he that brings the most of his actions to this rule, does most of all increase the peace and joy of his life.

And thus it is in every virtue; if you act up to every degree of it, the more happiness you have from it. And so of every vice; if you only abate its excesses, you do but little for yourself; but if you reject it in all degrees, then you feel the true ease and joy of a reformed mind.

As for example: If religion only restrains the excesses of revenge, but lets the spirit still live within you in lesses anstances, your religion may have made your life a little more outwardly decent, but not have made you at all happier or easier in yourself. But if you have once facrificed all thoughts of revenge, in obedience to

6 God.

God, and are resolved to return good for evil at all times, that you may render yourself more like to God, and fitter for his mercy in the kingdom of love and glory; this is a height of virtue that will make you feel its happiness.

Secondly, As to those fatisfactions and enjoyments which an exalted piety requireth us to deny ourselves, this deprives us of real comfort of life.

For, 1/t, Piety requires us to renounce no ways of life, where we can act reasonably, and offer what we do to the glory of God. All ways of life, all satisfactions and enjoyments that are within these bounds, are no way denied us by the strictest rules of piety. Whatever you can do, or enjoy, as in the presence of God, as his servant, as his rational creature, that has received reason and knowledge from him; all that you can perform conformably to a rational nature, and the will of God, all this is allowed by the laws of piety; and will you think that your life will be uncomfortable, unless you may displease God, be a sool and mad, and act contrary to that reason and wisdom which he has implanted in you?

And as for those satisfactions, which we dare not offer to a holy God, which are only invented by the folly and corruption of the world, which inflame our passions, and fink our souls into grossness and sensuality, and render us incapable of the divine savour either here or hereafter; surely it can be no uncomfortable state of life, to be rescued by religion from such self-murder, and to be rendered capable of eternal happiness.

Let us suppose a person destitute of that knowledge which we have from our senses, placed somewhere alone by himself, in the midst of a variety of things which he did not know how to use, that he has by him bread, wine, water, golden dust, iron chains, gravel, garments, fire, &c. Let it be supposed, that he has no knowledge of the right use of these things, nor any direction from his senses how to quench his thirst, or satisfy his hunger, or make any use of the things about him. Let it be supposed, that in his draught he puts golden dust into his eyes; when his eyes smart, he puts wine into his ears; that in his hunger, he puts gravel in his mouth; that in pain, he leads himself with the iron chains; that seel.

feeling cold, he puts his feet in the water; that being frighted at the fire, he runs away from it; that being weary, he makes a feat of his bread. Let it be fuppofed, that through his ignorance of the right use of the things that are about him, he will plainly torment himfelf whilft he lives; and at last die, blinded with dust, choaked with gravel, and loaded with irons. Let it be supposed that some good Being came to him, and shewed him the nature and use of all the things that were about him, and gave him such strict rules of using them, as would certainly, if observed, make him the happier for all that he had, and deliver him from the pains of hunger, and thirst, and cold.

Now could you with any reason assirm, that those strict rules of using those things that were about him, had rendered that poor man's life dull and uncomfort-

Now this is in fome measure a representation of the strict rules of religion; they only relieve our ignorance, save us from tormenting ourselves, and teach us to use every thing about us to our proper advantage.

Man is placed in a world full of variety of things; his ignorance makes him use many of them as abfurdly, as the man that put dust in his eyes to relieve his thirst, or put on chains to remove pain.

Religion therefore here comes in to his relief, and gives him strict rules of using every thing that is about him; that by so using them suitably to his own nature and the nature of the things, he may have always the pleasure of receiving a right benefit from them. It shews him what is strictly right in meat, drink, and cloaths; and that he has nothing else to expect from the things of this world, but to satisfy such wants of his own; and then to extend his assistance to all his brethren, that as far as he is able, he may help all his fellow-creatures to the same benefit from the world that he hath.

It tells him, that this world is incapable of giving him any other happiness; and that all endeavours to be happy in heaps of money, or acres of land, in fine cloaths, rich beds, stately equipage, and shew and splendour, are only vain endeavours, ignorant attempts after impossi-possibilities; these things being no more able to give the least degree of happiness, than dust in the eyes can cure thirst, or gravel in the mouth satisfy hunger; but, like dust and gravel misapplied, will only serve to render him more unhappy by fuch an ignorant mifufe of them.

It tells him, that although this world can do no more for him, than fatisfy these wants of the body; yet that there is a much greater good prepared for man, than eating, drinking, and dreffing; that it is yet invisible to his eyes, being too glorious for the apprehension of flesh and blood; but referved for him to enter upon, as foon as this fhort life is over; where, in a new body, formed to an angelic likeness, he shall dwell in the light and glory of God to all eternity.

It tells him, that this state of glory will be given to all those, that make a right use of the things of this prefent world; who do not blind themselves with golden dust, or eat gravel, or groan under loads of iron of their own putting on; but use bread, water, wine, and garments, for such ends as are according to nature and reafor; and who with faith and thankfulness worship the kind Giver of all that they enjoy here, and hope for hereafter.

Now can any one fay, that the strictest rules of such a religion as this, debar us any of the comforts of life? Might it not as justly be faid of those rules, that only hindered a man from choaking himfelf with gravel? For the strictues of these rules only consists in the exactness

Who could complain of the fevere strictness of a law. that without any exception forbad the putting of dust into our eyes? Who could think it too rigid, that there were no abatements? Now this is the strictness of religion, it requires nothing of us ftrictly, or without abatements, but where every degree of the thing is wrong, where every indulgence does us fome hurt.

If religion forbids all inflances of revenge without any exception, it is because all revenge is of the nature of poison; and though we do not take fo much as to put an end to life, yet if we take any at all, it corrupts the whole mass of blood, and makes it difficult to be restored to our former health.

If religion commands an univerfal charity, to love our neighbour as ourselves, to forgive and pray for all our enemies without any reserve; it is because all degrees of love are degrees of happiness, that strengthen and support the divine life of the soul, and are as necessary to its health and happiness, as proper food is necessary to the health and happiness of the body.

If religion has laws against laying up treasures upon earth, and commands us to be content with food and raiment; it is because every other use of the world is abusing it to our own vexation, and turning all its conveniencies into snares and traps to destroy us. It is because this plainness and simplicity of life, secures us from the cares and pains of restless pride and envy, and makes it easier to keep that strait road that will carry us to eternal life.

If religion faith, Sell that thou haft, and give to the poor; it is because there is no other natural or reasonable use of our riches, no other way of making ourselves happier for them; it is because it is as strictly right to give others that which we do not want ourfelves, as it is right to use so much as our own wants require. For if a man has more food than his own nature requires. how base and unreasonable is it, to invent foolish ways of wasting it, and make sport for his own full belly, rather than let his fellow-creatures have the fame comfort from food, which he hath had? It is fo far therefore from being a hard law of religion, to make this use of our riches, that a reasonable man would rejoice in that religion which teaches him to be happier in that which he gives away, than in that which he keeps for himfelf: which teaches him to make spare food and raiment be greater bleffings to him, than that which feeds and cloaths his own body.

If religion requires us sometimes to fast, and deny our natural appetites, it is to lessen that struggle and war that is in our nature; it is to render our bodies fitter instruments of purity, and more obedient to the good motions of divine grace; it is to dry up the springs of our passions that war against the soul, to cool the slame of our blood, and render the mind more capable of divine meditations. So that although these abstinences give some pain to the body, yet they so lessen the power of bodily appetites and passions, and so increase our taste of spiritual joys, that even these severities of religion, when practised with discretion, add much to the comfortable enjoyment of our lives. If religion calleth us to a life of watching and prayer, it is because we live amongst a crowd of enemies, and are always in need of the ailistance of God. If we are to confess and bewail our fins, it is because such confessions relieve the mind, and restore it to ease; as burdens and weights taken off the shoulders, relieve the body, and make it easier to itself. If we are to be frequent and fervent in holy petitions, it is to keep us steady in the fight of our true good, and that we may never want the happiness of a lively faith, a joyful hope, and well-grounded trust in God. If we are to pray often, it is that we may be often happy in fuch fecret joys as only prayer can give; in fuch communications of the divine prefence, as will fill our minds with all the happiness that beings not in heaven are capable of.

Was there any thing in the world more worth our care; was there any exercise of the mind, or any conversation with men, that turned more to our advantage than this intercourse with God, we should not be called to fuch a continuance in prayer. But if a man confiders what it is that he leaves when he retires to devotion, he will find it no fmall happiness to be so often relieved from doing nothing, or nothing to the purpose; from dull idleness, unprofitable labour, or vain conversation. If he confiders, that all that is in the world, and all that is doing in it, is only for the body, and bodily enjoyments, he will have reason to rejoice at those hours of prayer, which carry him to higher confolations, which raife him above these poor concerns, which open to his mind a scene of greater things, and accustom his foul to the hope and expectation of them.

If religion commands us to live wholly unto God, and to do all to his glory; it is because every other way is living wholly against ourselves, and will end in our own shame and contusion of face.

As every thing is dark, that God does not enlighten; as every thing is fenseless, that has not its share of knowledge from him; as nothing lives, but by partaking of life from him; as nothing exists, but because he commands it to be; so there is no glory, or greatness, but what is the glory or greatness of God.

We indeed may talk of human glory, as we may talk of human life or human knowledge; but as we are fure that human life implies nothing of our own, but a dependent living in God, or enjoying to much life in God; to human glory, whenever we find it, must be only to much glory as we enjoy in the glory of God.

This is the state of all creatures, whether men or angels; as they make not themselves, so they enjoy nothing from themselves; if they are great, it must be only as great receivers of the gifts of God; their power can only be so much of the divine Power acting in them; their wisdom can be only so much of the divine Wisdom shining within them; and their light and glory, only so much of the light and glory of God shining upon them.

As they are not men or angels, because they had a mind to be fo themselves, but because the will of God formed them to be what they are; fo they cannot enjoy this or that happiness of men or angels, because they have a mind to it, but because it is the will of God, that fuch things be the happiness of men, and such things the happiness of angels. But now if God be thus all in all; if his will is thus the measure of all things, and all natures; if nothing can be done, but by his power; if nothing can be feen, but by a light from him; if we have nothing to fear, but from his justice; if we have nothing to hope for, but from his goodness; if this is the nature of man, thus helplets in himfelf; if this is the flate of all creatures, as well those in heaven, as those on earth; if they are nothing, can do nothing, can fuffer no pain, nor feel any happiness, but so far, and in such degrees, as the power of God does all this: if this be the state of things, then how can we have the least glimpse of joy and comfort, how can we have any peaceful ful enjoyment of ourselves, but by living wholly unto that God, using and doing every thing conformably to his will? A life thus devoted unto God, looking wholly unto him in all our actions, and doing all things suitably to his glory, is so far from being dull, and uncomfortable, that it creates new comforts in every thing that we do.

On the contrary, would you fee how happy they are who live according to their own wills, who cannot fubmit to the dull and melancholy business of a life devoted unto God? look at the man in the parable, to whom his

Lord had given one talent.

He could not bear the thoughts of using his talent according to the will of him from whom he had it, and therefore he chose to make himself happier in a way of his own. Lord, says he, I knew thee, that thou art are hard man, reaping where they hadst not sown, and gathering where they hadst not strawed. And I was assaying and went and hid thy talent in the earth. Lo there thou hast that is thine. Matt. xxv. 24.

His Lord having convicted him out of his own mouth, dispatches him with this sentence: Cast the unprositable fervant into utter darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matt. xxv. 30.

Here you fee how happy this man made himfelf by not acting wholly according to the Lord's will. It was, according to his own account, a happiness of murmuring and discontent; I knew thee, says he, that thou wast an hard man: It was an happiness of fears and apprehensions; I was, says he, afraid: it was an happiness of vain labours and fruitless travails: I went, says he, and hid thy talent; and after having been a while the sport of foolish passions, tormenting fears, and fruitless labours, he is rewarded with darkness, eternal weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

Now this is the happiness of all those, who look upon a strict and exalted piety, that is, a right use of their talent, to be a dull and melancholy state of life.

They may live a while free from the restraints and directions of religion, but instead thereof, they must be under the absurd government of their passions: they must, like the man in the parable, live in murmurings and discontents, in fears and apprehensions. They may avoid the labour of doing good, of spending their time devoutly, of laying up treasures in heaven, of cloathing the naked, of vifiting the fick; but then they must, like this man, have labours and pains in vain, that tend to no use or advantage, that do no good either to themselves, or others; they must travail, and labour, and work, and dig to hide their talent in the earth. They must like him, at the Lord's coming, be convicted out of their own mouths, be accused by their own hearts, and have every thing that they have faid and thought of religion, be made to shew the justice of their condemnation to eternal darkness, weeping and gnashing of teeth.

This the purchase that they make, who avoid the ftrictness and perfection of religion, in order to live hap-

On the other hand, would you fee a fhort description of the happiness of a life rightly employed, wholly devoted to God, you must look at the man in the parable, to whom his Lord had given five talents. Lord, fays he, thou deliverest unto me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them sive talents more. His Lord said unto him, Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

Here you fee a life that is wholly intent upon the improvement of the talents that is devoted wholly unto God, is a state of happiness, prosperous labours, and glorious fuccefs. Here are not, as in the former cafe, any uneafy passions, murmurings, vain fears, and fruitless labours. The man is not toiling, and digging in the earth for no end or advantage; but his pious labours prosper in his hands, his happiness increases upon him, the bleffing of five becomes the bleffing of ten talents; and he is received with a Well done good and faithful fervant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

Now as the case of these men in the parable left nothing else to their choice, but either to be happy in ufing their gifts to the glory of the Lord, or miferable by using them according to their own humours and fancies; fo the state of Christianity leaves us no other choice.

All that we have, all that we are, all that we enjoy, are only so many talents from God: if we use them to the ends of a pious and holy life, our five talents will become ten, and our labours will carry us into the joy of our Lord; but if we abuse them to the gratifications of our own passions, sacrificing the gifts of God to our own pride and vanity, we shall live here in vain labours and foolish anxieties, shunning religion as a melancholy thing, accusing our Lord as a hard master, and then fall into everlasting misery.

We may for a while amuse ourselves with names, and sounds, and shadows of happiness; we may talk of this or that greatness and dignity; but if we defire real happiness, we have no other possible way to it, but by improving our talents, by so holily and piously using the powers and faculties of men in this present state, that we may be happy and glorious in the powers and faculties of angels in the world to come.

How ignorant therefore are they of the nature of religion, of the nature of man, and the nature of God, who think a life of strict piety and devotion to God, to be a dull and uncomfortable state; when it is so plain and certain, that there is neither comfort or joy to be found in any thing else?

CHAP. XII.

The happiness of a life wholly devoted unto God, farther proved, from the vanity, the sensuality, and the ridiculous, poor enjoyments, which they are forced to take up with, who live according to their own humours. This represented in various characters.

E may still fee more of the happiness of a life devoted unto God, by considering the poor contrivances for happiness, and the contemptible ways of life, which they are threwn into, who are not under the directions of a strict piety, but feeking after happiness by other methods.

If one looks at their lives, who live by no rule but their own humours and fancies; if one fees but what it is, which they call joy, and greatness, and happiness; if one fees how they rejoice and repent, change and fly from one delution to another; one shall find great reason to rejoice, that God hath appointed a ftrait and narrow way that leadeth unto life, and that we are not left to the folly of our own minds, or forced to take up with such shadows of joy and happiness, as the weakness and folly of the world has invented. I say invented, because those things which make up the joy and happiness of this world, are mere inventions, which have no foundation in nature and reason, are no way the proper good or happiness of man, no way perfect either in his body, or his mind, or carry him to his true end.

As for instance, when a man proposes to be happy in ways of ambition, by raising himself to some imaginary heights above other people; this is truly an invention of happiness which has no foundation in nature, but is as mere a cheat of our own making, as if a man should intend to make himself happy by climbing up a ladder.

If a woman feeks for a happiness from fine colours or spots upon her face, from jewels and rich cloaths, this is as merely an invention of happiness, as contrary to nature and reason, as if she should propose to make herself happy, by painting a post, and putting the same finery upon it. It is in this respect that I call these joys and happiness of the world, mere inventions of happiness, because neither God, nor nature, nor reason hath appointed them as such; but whatever appears joyful, or great, or happy in them, is entirely created or invented by the blindness and vanity of our own minds.

And it is on these inventions of happiness, that I defire you to cast your eye, that you may thence learn, how great a good religion is, which delivers you from such a multitude of follies and vain pursuits, as are the torment and vexation of minds, that wander from their true happiness in God.

Look at Flatus, and learn how miferable they are,

Flatus is rich and in health, yet always uneafy, and always fearching after happiness. Every time you visit him, you find fome new project in his head, he is eager upon it, as fomething that is more worth his while, and will do more for him, than any thing that is already past. Every new thing so feizes him, that if you was to take him from it, he would think himself quite undone. His fanguine temper, and strong passions, promise him so much happiness in every thing, that he is always cheated, and is satisfied with nothing.

At his first setting out in life, fine cloaths was his delight, his enquiry was only after the best taylors and peruke-makers, and he had no thoughts of excelling in any thing but dress. He spared no expence, but carried every nicety to its greatest height. But this happiness not answering his expectations, he left off his brocades, put on a plain coat, railed at sops and beaux, and gave himself up to gaming with great eagerness.

This new pleafure fatisfied him for some time, he envied no other way of life. But being by the fate of play drawn into a duel, where he narrowly escaped his death, he left off the dice, and sought for happiness no longer amongst the gamesters.

The next thing that feized his wandering imagination, was the diversions of the town: and for more than a twelvemonth, you heard him talk of nothing but ladies; drawing-rooms, birth-nights, plays, balls, and affemblies. But growing fick of these, he had recourse to hard drinking. Here he had many a merry night, and met with stronger joys than any he had felt before. Here he had thoughts of setting up his staff, and looking out no farther; but unluckily falling into a fever he grew angry at all strong liquors, and took his leave of the happiness of being drunk.

The next attempt after happiness, carried him into the field, for two or three years nothing was so happy as hunting; he entered upon it with all his soul, and leaped more hedges and ditches than had ever been known in so short a time. You never saw him but in a green coat; he was the envy of all that blow the horn, and always spoke to his dogs in great propriety of language. If you met him at home in a bad day, you would hear him blow his horn, and be entertained with the surprizing accidents of the last noble chase. No sooner had Flatus outdone all the world in the breed and education of his dogs, built new kennels, new stables, and bought a new hunting-feat, but he immediately got fight of another happiness, hated the senseless noise and hurry of hunting. gave away his dogs, and was for some time after deep in the pleafures of building.

. Now he invents new kind of dove-cotes, and has fuch contrivances in his barns and ftables, as were never feen before: he wonders at the dulness of the old builders, is wholly bent upon the improvement of architecture, and will hardly hang a door in the ordinary way. He tells his friends, that he never was fo delighted in any thing in his life; that he has more happiness amongst his brick and mortar, than ever he had at court; and that he is contriving how to have fome little matter to do that way as long as he lives.

The next year he leaveshis house unfinished, complains to every body of masons and carpenters, and devotes himself wholly to the happiness of riding about. After this, you can never fee him but on horse-back, and fo highly delighted with this new way of life, that he would tell you, give him but his horse and a clean country to ride in, and you might take all the rest to yourfelf. A variety of new faddles and bridles, and a great change of horses, added much to the pleasure of this new way of life. But however, having after fome time tired both himfelf and his horfes, the happieft thing he could think of next, was to go abroad and vifit foreign countries; and there indeed happiness exceeded his imagination, and he was only uneafy that he had begun fo fine a life no fooner. The next month he returned home, unable to bear any longer the impertinence of foreigners.

After this, he was a great student for one whole year; he was up early and late at his Italian grammar, that he might have the happiness of understanding the opera, whenever he should hear one, and not be like those unreasonable people, that are pleased with they don't know

Flatus is very ill-natured, or otherwife, just as his affairs happen to be when you visit him; if you find him when some project is almost wore out, you will find a peevish

peevish ill-bred man; but if you had seen him just as he entered upon his riding regimen, or begun to excel in founding of the horn, you had been faluted with great civility.

Flatus is now at a full fland, and is doing what he never did in his life before, he is reasoning and reflecting with himfelf. He lofes feveral days, in confidering which of his cast-off ways of life he should try again.

But here a new project comes in to his relief. He is now living upon herbs, and running about the country, to get himself into as good wind as any running footman in the kingdom.

I have been thus circumstantial in fo many foolish particulars of this kind, because I hope, that every particular folly that you fee here, will naturally turn itself into an argument for the wifdom and happiness of a religious life.

If I could lay before you a particular account of all the circumftances of terror and diffrefs, that daily attend a life at fea, the more particular I was in the account, the more I should make you feel and rejoice in the happinefs of living upon the land.

In like manner, the more I enumerate the follies, anxieties, delufions, and reftlefs defires which go thro' every part of a life devoted to human passions, and worldly enjoyments, the more you must be affected with that peace, and rest, and solid content, which religion gives to the fouls of men.

If you had but just cast your eye upon a madman, or a fool, it perhaps fignifies little or nothing to you; but if you was to attend them for fome days, and observe the lamentable madness and flupidity of all their actions, this would be an affecting fight, and would make you often blefs yourfelf for the enjoyment of your reason and fenfes.

Just so, if you are only told in the gross, of the folly and madness of a life devoted to the world, it makes little or no impression upon you; but if you are thewn how fuch people live every day; if you fee the continual folly and madness of all their particular actions and defigns, this would be an affecting fight, and make make you bless God, for having given you a greater happiness to aspire after.

So that characters of this kind, the more folly and ridicule they have in them, provided that they be but natural, are most useful to correct our minds; and therefore are no where more proper than in books of devotion, and practical piety. And as in several cases we best learn the nature of things, by looking at that which is contrary to them; so perhaps we best apprehend the excellency of wisdom, by contemplating the wild extravagances of folly.

I shall therefore continue this method a little farther, and endeavour to recommend the happiness of piety to you; by shewing you in some other instances, how miserably and poorly they live, who live without it.

But you will perhaps fay, that the ridiculous, reftlefs life of Flatus, is not the common state of those who refign themselves up to live by their own humours, and neglect the strict rules of religion; and that therefore it is not so great an argument of the happiness of a religious life, as I would make it.

I answer, that I am afraid it is one of the most general characters in life; and that few people can read it, without seeing something in it that belongs to themselves. For where shall we find that wise and happy man, who has not been eagerly pursuing different appearances of happiness, sometimes thinking it was here,

And if people were to divide their lives into particular flages, and aik themfelves what they were purfuing, or what it was which they had chiefly in view, when they was twenty years old, what at twenty-five, what at thirty, what at forty, what at fifty, and so on, till they were brought to their last bed; numbers of people would find, that they had liked and disliked, and pursued as many different appearances of happiness, as are to be seen in the life of Flatus.

And thus it must necessarily be, more or less with all those who propose any other happiness, than that which arises from a strict and regular piety.

But fecondly, Let it be granted, that the generality of people are not of fuch reftlers, fichle tempers as Flatus; the difference then is only this, Flatus is continually changing and trying fomething new, but others are content with fome one ftate; they do not leave gaming, and then fall to hunting. But they have to much fteadiness in their tempers, that some seek after no other happiness, but that of heaping up riches; others grow old in the sports of the field; others are content to drink themselves to death, without the least enquiry after any other happiness.

Now is there any thing more happy or reasonable, in such a life as this, than in the life of Flatus? Is it not as great and desirable, as wise and happy, to be constantly changing from one thing to another, as to be nothing else but a gatherer of money, a hunter, a gamester, or a drunkard all your life?

Shall religion be looked upon as a burden, as a dull and melancholy state, for calling men from such happiness as this, to live according to the laws of God, to labour after the persection of their nature, and prepare themselves for an endless state of joy and glory in the presence of God?

But turn your eyes now another way, and let the trifling joys, the gewgaw happiness of Feliciana, teach you how wife they are, what delusion they escape, whose hearts and hopes are fixed upon an happiness in

God.

If you was to live with Feliciana but one half year, you would fee all the happiness that she is to have as long as she lives. She has no more to come, but the poor repetition of that which could never have pleased once, but through a littleness of mind, and want of thought.

She is again to be droffed fine, and keep her vifiting day. She is again to change the colour of her cloaths, again to have a new head, and again put patches on her face. She is again to fee who acts best at the playhouse, and who sings finest at the opera. She is again to make ten visits in a day, and be ten times in a day trying to talk artfully, easily and politely about nothing.

She is to be again delighted with some new fashion;

and again angry at the change of some old one. She is to be again at cards, and gaming at midnight, and again in bed at noon. She is to be again pleased with hypocritical compliments, and again disturbed with imaginary affronts. She is to be again pleased with her good luck at gaming, and again tormented with the loss of her money. She is again to prepare herself for a birth-night, and again fee the town full of good company. She is again to bear the cabals and intrigues of the town, again to have secret intelligence of private amours, and early notice of marriages, quarrels, and partings.

If you fee her come out of her chariot more briskly than usual, converse with more spirit, and seem suller of joy than she was last week, it is because there is some surprizing new dress, or new diversion just come to town.

These are all the substantial and regular parts of Feliciana's happiness; and the never knew a pleasant day in her life, but it was owing to some one, or more, of these things.

It is for this happiness, that she has always been deaf to the reasonings of religion, that her heart has been too gay and cheerful to consider what is right or wrong in regard to eternity; or to listen to the sound of such dull words, as wisdom, piety and devotion.

It is for fear of losing some of this happiness, that the dares not meditate on the immortality of her soul, consider her relation to God, or turn her thoughts towards those joys, which make saints and angels infinitely happy in the presence and glory of God.

But now let it here be observed, that as poor a round of happiness as this appears, yet most women that avoid the restraints of religion for a gay life, must be content with very small parts of it. As they have not Feliciana's fortune and figure in the world, so they must give away the comforts of a pious life, for a very small part of her happiness.

And if you look into the world, and observe the lives of those women, whom no arguments can persuade to live wholly unto God, in a wife and pious employment of themselves, you will find most of them to be such, as lose all the comforts of religion, without gaining the tenth part of Feliciana's happiness. They are such as spend their time and fortunes only in mimicking the pleasures of richer people; and rather look and long after, than enjoy those delusions, which are only to be purchased by considerable fortunes.

But if a women of high birth, and great fortune, having read the gospel, should rather wish to be an under fervant in some pious family, where wissom, piety, and great devotion, directed all the actions of every day: if the should rather wish this, than to live at the top of Feliciana's happines: I should think her neither mad, nor melancholy; but that she judged as rightly of the spirit of the gospel, as if she had rather wished to be poor Lazarus at the gate, than to be the rich man cloathed in purple and fine linen, and faring sumptuously every day.

But to proceed: Would you know what an happiness it is, to be governed by the wisdom of religion, and be devoted to the joys and hopes of a pious life, look at the poor condition of Succus, whose greatest happiness, is a good night's rest in bed, and a good meal when he is up. When he talks of happiness, it is always in such expressions, as shews you, that he has only his bed and his dinner in his thoughts.

This regard to his meals and repofe, makes Succus order all the reft of his time with relation to them. He will undertake no bufinefs that may hurry his fpirits, or break in upon his hours of eating and reft. If he reads, it fhall only be for half an hour, because that is sufficient to amuse the spirits; and he will read something that may make him laugh, as rendering the body fitter for its food and reft. Or if he has at any time a mind to indulge a grave thought, he always has recourse to a useful treatise upon the ancient cookery. Succus is an enemy to all party matters, having made it an observation, that there is as good eating amongst the whigs as the tories.

He talks cooly and moderately upon all fubjects, and is as fearful of falling into a passion, as of catching cold; being very positive, that they are both equally injurious to the stomach. If you ever see him more hot than ordinary, as is upon some provoking occasion, when the difpute about cookery runs very high, or in the defence of fome beloved difh, which has often made him happy. But he has been fo long upon these subjects, is so well acquainted with all that can be said on both sides, and has so often answered all objections, that he generally decides the matter with great gravity.

Succus is very loyal, and as foon as ever he likes any wine, he drinks the king's health with all his heart. Nothing could put rebellious thoughts into his head, unlefs he should live to see a proclamation against eating of pheafant's eggs.

All the hours that are not devoted either to repose, or nourishment, are looked upon by Succus as waste or spare time. For this reason he lodges near a costee-house and a tavern, that when he rises in the morning, he may hear the news, and when he parts at night, he may not have far to bed. In the morning you always see him in the same place in the cossee-room, and if he seems more attentively engaged than ordinary, it is because some criminal is broke out of Newgate, or some lady was robed last night, but they cannot tell where. When he has learned all that he can, he goes home to settle the matter with the barber's boy, that comes to shave him.

The next waste time that lies upon his hands, is from dinner to supper. And if melancholy thoughts ever come into his head, it is at this time, when he is often left to himself for an hour or more, and that after the greatest pleasure he knows is just over. He is afraid to sleep, because he has heard it is not healthful at that time, so that he is forced to resuse so welcome a gueit.

But here he is foon relieved by a fettled method of playing at cards, till it is time to think of fome little nice matter for fupper.

After this, Succus takes his glafs, talks of the excellency of the English constitution, and praises that minifter the most, who keeps the best table.

On a Sunday night you may fometimes hear him condemning the iniquity of the town rakes; and the bitterest thing that he says against them, is this, that he verily believes some of them are so abandoned, as not to have a regular meal, or a sound night's sleep in a week.

At eleven, Succus bids all good night, and parts in G 3 great friendship. He is presently in bed, and sleeps till it is time to go to the coffee-house next morning.

If you was to live with Succus for a twelvemonth, this is all that you would fee in his life, except a few curfes and oaths that he uses as occasion offers.

And now I cannot help making this reflection:

That as I believe the most likely means in the world to inspire a person with true piety, was to have seen the example of some eminent professor of religion; so the next thing that is likely to fill one with the same zeal, is to see the folly, the baseness, and poor satisfactions of a life destitute of religion. As the one exercises us to love and admire the wildom and greatness of religion, so the other may make us fearful of living without it.

For who can help bleffing God for the means of grace, and for the hope of glory, when he fees what variety of folly they fink into, who live without it? Who would not heartily engage in all the labours and exercises of a pious life, be stedfast, immoveable, and always abounding in the work of the Lord; when he sees what dull sensuality, what poor views, what gross enjoyments they are left to who feek for happiness in other ways.

So that whether we confider the greatness of religion, or the littleness of all other things, and the meanness of all other enjoyments, there is nothing to be found in the whole nature of things for a thoughtful mind to rest upon, but a happiness in the hopes of religion.

Confider now with yourfelf how unreasonably it is pretended, that a life of strict piety must be a dull and anxious state? For can it with any reason be said, that the duties and restraints of religion must render our lives heavy and melancholy, when they only deprive us of fuch happiness, as has been here laid before you?

Must it be tedious and tiresome to live in the continual exercise of charity, devotion and temperance, to act wisely and virtuously, to do good to the utmost of your power, to imitate the divine perfections, and prepare yourself for the enjoyment of God? Must it be dull and tiresome, to be delivered from blindness and vanity, from salfe hopes and vain fears, to improve in holiness, to feel the comforts of conscience in all your actions, to know that God is your friend, that all must work for your good, good, that neither life nor death, neither men nor devils can do you any harm; but that all your fufferings and doings, that are offered unto God, all your watchings and prayers, and labours of love and charity, all your improvements, are in a fhort time to be rewarded with everlasting glory in the presence of God; must such a state as this be dull and tiresome for want of such happiness, as Flatus or Feliciana enjoys?

Now if this cannot be faid, then there is no happiness or pleasure lost, by being strictly pious, nor has the devout man any thing to envy in any other state of life. For all the art and contrivance in the world, without religion, cannot make more of human life, or carry its happiness to any greater height, than Flatus or Feliciana have done.

The finest wit, the greatest genius upon earth, if not governed by religion, must be as foolish, and low, and vain in his methods of happiness, as the poor Succus.

If you was to fee a man dully endeavouring all his life to fatisfy his thirst, by holding up one and the same empty cup to his mouth, you would certainly despite his ignorance.

But if you should see others of brighter parts, and finer understandings, ridiculing the duil satisfaction of one cup, and thinking to satisfy their own thirst by a variety of gilt and golden empty cups; would you think that these were ever the wiser, or happier, or better employed, for their siner parts?

Now this is all the difference that you can fee in the happiness of this life.

The dull and heavy foul may be content with one empty appearance of happiness, and be continually trying to hold one and the same empty cup to his mouth all his life. But then, let the wit, the great scholar, the fine genius, the great statesman, the polite gentleman, lay all their heads together, and they can only shew you more, and various, empty appearances of happiness; give them all the world into their hands, let them cut and carve as they please, they can only make a greater variety of empty cups.

So that if you do not think it hard to be deprived of the pleasures of gluttony for the fake of religion, you have no reason to think it hard to be restrained from any other worldly pleasure. For search as deep, and look as far as you will, there is nothing here to be found, that is nobler or greater than high eating and drinking, unless you look for it in the wisdom and laws of religion.

And if all that is in the world, are only so many empty cups, what does it fignify, which you take, or how many you take, or how many you have?

If you would but use yourself to such meditations as these, to reslect upon the vanity of all orders of life without piety, to consider how all the ways of the world, are so many different ways or error, blindness, and mistake; you would soon find your heart made wifer and better by it. These meditations would awaken your soul into a zealous desire of that solid happiness, which is only to be found in recourse to God.

Examples of great piety are not now common in the world, it may not be your happiness to live within sight of any, or to have your virtue inslamed by their light and servour. But the misery and folly of worldly men is what meets your eyes in every place, and you need not look far to see, how poorly, how vainly men dream away their lives for want of religious wisdom.

This is the reason that I have laid before you so many characters of the vanity of a worldly life, to teach you to make a benefit of the corruption of the age, and that you may be made wise, though not by the sight of what piety is, yet by seeing what misery and folly reigns, where piety is not.

If you would turn your mind to fuch reflections as thefe, your own observation would carry this instruction much farther, and all your conversation and acquaintance with the world, would be a daily conviction to you, of the necessity of seeking some greater happiness, than all the poor enjoyments this world can give.

To meditate upon the perfection of the divine attributes, to contemplate the glories of heaven, to confider the joys of faints and angels living for ever in the brightness and glory of the divine presence; these are the meditations of souls advanced in piety, and not so suited to every capacity.

But

But to fee and confider the emptiness and error of all worldly happiness; to see the groffness of fensuality, the poornefs of pride, the stupidity of covetousnefs, the vanity of drefs, the delufion of honour, the blindness of our passions, the uncertainty of our lives, and the shortness of all worldly projects; these are meditations that are fuited to all capacities, fitted to strike all minds; they require no depth of thought to fublime speculation, but are forced upon us by all our fenses, and taught us by almost every thing that we fee and hear.

This is that wifdom that crieth, and putteth forth her voice in the streets, that Prov. viii. 1.

standeth at all our doors, that appealeth to all our fenses, teaching us in every thing and every where, by all that we fee, and all that we hear, by births and burials, by fickness and health, by life and death, by pains and poverty, by mifery and vanity, and by all the changes and chances of life; that there is nothing elfe for man to look after, no other end in nature for him to drive at, but a happiness which is only to be found in the hopes and expectations of religion.

CHAP. XIII.

That not only a life of vanity or fenfuality, but even the most regular kind of life, that is not governed by great devotion, sufficiently sheaves its miseries its wants, and emptiness, to the eyes of all the world. This represented in various characters.

IT is a very remarkable faying of our Lord and Saviour to his disciples in these words: Blessed are your eyes for they see, and your ears for they hear. They teach us two things; First, That the dulness and heaviness of men's minds, with regard to spiritual matters, is so great, that it may justly be compared to the want of eyes and ears.

Seo ndly, That God has fo filled every thing and every place with motives and arguments for a godly life, that they who are but so bleffed, so happy as to use their eyes and their ears, must needs be affected with them.

Now, though this was in a more especial manner the case of those whose senses were witnesses of the life and miracles and doctrines of our blessed Lord; yet it is as truly the case of all Christians at this time. For the reasons of religion, the calls to piety are so written and engraved upon every thing, and present themselves so strongly and so constantly to all our senses in every thing that we meet; that they can only be disregarded by eyes that see not, and ears that hear not.

What greater motive to a religious life, than the vanity, the poorness of all worldly enjoyments; And yet who can help seeing and seeling this every day of his life?

What greater call to look towards God, than the pains, the fickness, the crosses, and vexations of this life; and yet whose eyes and ears are not daily witnesses of them!

What miracles could more ftrongly appeal to our fenfes, or what meffage from heaven speak louder to us, than the daily dying and departure of our fellow creatures does?

So that the one thing needful, or the great end of life, is not left to be discovered by fine reasoning, and deep reflections; but is pressed upon us in the plainest manner, by the experience of all our senses, by every thing that we meet with in life.

Let us but intend to fee and hear, and then the whole world becomes a book of wisdom and instruction to us; all that is regular in the order of nature, all that is accidental in the course of things, all the mistakes and disappointments that happens to ourselves, all the miseries and errors that we see in other people, become so many plain lessons of advice to us; teaching us with as much affurance as an angel from heaven, that we can no ways raise ourselves to any true happiness, but by turning all our thoughts, our wishes, and endeavours, after the happiness of another life.

It is this right use of the world that I would lead you into, by directing you to turn your eyes upon every shape of human folly, that you may thence draw fresh arguments and motives of living to the best and greatest purposes of your creation.

And if you would but carry this intention about you, of profiting by the follies of the world, and of learning the greatness of religion, from the littleness and vanity of every other way of life; if, I fay, you would but carry this intention in your mind, you would find every day, every place, and every person, a fresh proof of their wisdom, who chuse to live wholly unto God. You would then often return home, the wifer, the better, and the more strengthened in religion, by every thing that has fallen in your way.

Octavius is a learned, ingenious man, well versed in most parts of literature, and no stranger to any kingdom in Europe. The other day, being just recovered from a lingering sever, he took upon him to talk thus to his friends.

My glass, says he, is almost run out; and your eyes fee how many marks of age and death I bear about me: But I plainly feel myself sinking away faster than any standers-by imagine. I fully believe, that one year more will conclude my reckoning.

The attention of his friends was much raifed by fuch a declaration, expecting to hear fornething truly excellent from fo learned a man, who had but a year longer to live. When Octavius proceeded in this manner: For these reasons, says he, my friends, I have left off all taverns, the wine of those places is not good enough for me in this decay of nature. I must now be nice in what I drink; I can't pretend to do as I have done; and therefore am resolved to furnish my own cellar with a little of the very best, though it cost me ever so much.

I must also tell you, my friends, that age forces a man to be wife in many other respects, and makes us change many of our opinions and practices.

You know how much I have liked a large acquaintance: I now condemn it as an error. Three or four chearful, diverting companions, is all that I now defire; because I find that in my present infirmities, if I am left alone, or to grave company, I am not so easy to myfelf.

A few days after Octavius had made this declaration to his friends, he relapfed into his former illness, was committed to a nurse, who closed his eyes before his fresh parcel of wine came in.

Young Eugenius, who was prefent at this difcourfe, went home a new man, with full resolutions of devoting himfelf wholly unto God.

I never, fays Eugenius, was fo deeply affected with the wifdom and importance of religion, as when I faw how poorly and meanly the learned Octavius was to leave the world through the want of it.

How often had I envied his great learning, his skill in language, his knowledge of antiquity, his address, and fine manner of expressing himself upon all subjects! But when I saw how poorly it all ended, what was to be the last year of such a life, and how soolishly the master of all these accomplishments was then forced to talk, for want of being acquainted with the joys and expectations of picty: I was thoroughly convinced, that there was nothing to be envied or desired, but a life of true piety: nor any thing so poor and comfortless, as a death without it.

Now as the young Eugenius was thus edified and inftructed in the prefent case; so if you are so happy as to have any thing of his thoughtful temper, you will meet with variety of instruction of this kind; you will find that arguments for the wisdom and happiness of a strict piety, offer themselves in all places, and appeal to all your senses in the plainest manner.

You will find, that all the world preaches to an attentive mind; and that if you have but ears to hear, almost every thing you meet, teaches you some lesson of wifdom.

But now, if to these admonitions and instructions, which we receive from our senses, from an experience of the state of human life; if to these we add the lights of religion, those great truths which the son of God has taught us; it will be then as much past all doubt, that there is but one happiness for man, as that there is but one God.

For fince religion teaches us that our fouls are immortal, that piety and devotion will carry them to an eternal enjoyment of God; and that carnal, worldly tempers tempers will fink them into an everlasting misery with damned spirits; what gross nonsense and stupidity is it to give the name of joy or happiness to any thing but that which carries us to this joy and happiness in God?

Was all to die with our bodies, there might be some pretence for those different forts of happiness, that are so much talked of: but since our all begins at the death of our bodies; since all men are to be immortal either in misery or happiness, in a world entirely different from this; since they are all hastening hence at all uncertainties, as fast as death can cut them down; some in fickness, some in health, some sleeping, some waking, some at midnight, others at cock-crowing, and all at hours that they know not of; is it not certain that no man can exceed another in joy and happiness, but so far as he exceeds him in those virtues which fit him for a happier death?

Cognatus is a fober, regular clergyman, of good repute in the world, and well esteemed in his parish. All his parishioners say he is an honest man, and very notable at making a bargain. The farmers listen to him with great attention, when he talks of the properest time of felling corn.

He has been for twenty years a diligent observer of markets, and has raised a confiderable fortune by good management.

Cognatus is very orthodox and full of efteem for our English Liturgy; and if he has not prayers on Wednefdays and Fridays, it is because his predecessor had not used the parish to any such custom.

As he cannot ferve both his livings himself, so he makes it matter of conscience to keep a sober curate upon one of them, whom he hires to take care of all the souls in the parish, at as cheap a rate as a sober man can be procured.

Cognatus has been very prosperous all his time; but ftill he has had the uneasiness and vexations that they have, who are deep in worldly business. Taxes, losses, crosses, bad mortgages, bad tenants, and the hardness of the times, are frequent subjects of his conversation; and a good or a bad season has a great effect upon his spirits.

Cognatus has no other end in growing rich, but that he may leave a confiderable fortune to a niece, whom he has politely educated in expensive finery, by what he has faved out of the tythes of two livings.

The neighbours look upon Cognatus as an happy clergyman, because they see him (as they call it) in good circumstances; and some of them intend to dedicate their own sons to the church, because they see how well it has succeeded with Cognatus, whose father was but an ordinary man.

But now if Cognatus when he first entered into holy orders, had perceived how absurd a thing it is to grow rich by the gospel: if he had proposed to himself the example of some primitive father; if he had had the piety of the great St Austin in his eye, who durft not enrich any of his relations out of the revenue of the Church: if, instead of twenty years care to lay up treafures upon earth, he had distributed the income of every year in the most christian acts of charity and compassion.

If, instead of tempting his niece to be proud, and providing her with such ornaments, as the Apostle forbids, he had cloathed, comforted, and assisted numbers of widows, orphans, and distressed, who were all to appear for him at the last day.

If, instead of the cares and anxieties of bad bonds, troublesome mortgages and ill bargains, he had had the constant comfort of knowing that his treasure was securely laid up, where neither moth corrupteth, nor thieves break through and steal; could it with any reason be said, that he had mistaken the spirit and dignity of his order, or lessened any of that happiness which is to be found in his facred employments?

If, instead of rejoicing in the happiness of a second living, he had thought it as unbecoming the office of a clergyman to traffic for gain in holy things, as to open a fhop.

If he had thought it better to recommend fome honest labour to his niece, than to support her in idleness by the labours of a curate; better that she should want sine clothes and a rich husband, than the cures of souls should be farmed about, and brother clergymen not suffered to live by those altars, at which they serve. If this had been been the spirit of Cognatus, could it with any reason be faid, that these rules of religion, this strictness of piety, had robbed Cognatus of any real happiness? Could it be faid, that a life thus governed by the spirit of the gospel, must be dull and melancholy, if compared to that of raising a fortune for a niece?

Now as this cannot be faid in the prefent case, so in every other kind of life, if you enter into the particulars of it, you will find, that however easy and prosperous it may seem, yet you cannot add piety to any part of it, without adding so much of a better joy and happiness to it.

Look now at that condition of life, which draws the envy of all eyes.

Negotius is a temperate honest man. He served his time under a master of great trade, but has by his own management made it a more considerable business than ever it was before. For thirty years last past, he has wrote fifty or fixty letters in a week, and is busy in corresponding with all parts of Europe. The general good of trade seems to Negotius to be the general good of life; whomsoever he admires, whatever he commends or condemns either in church or state, is admired, commended, or condemned, with some regard to trade.

As money is continually pouring in upon him, so he often lets it go in various kinds of expence and generofity, and fometimes in ways of charity.

Negotius is always ready to join in any public contribution: If a purfe is making at any place where he happens to be, whether it be to buy a plate for a horfe-race, or to redeem a prisoner out of jail, you are always sure of having fomething from him.

He has given a fine ring of bells to a church in the country: and there is much expectation that he will fome time or other make a more beautiful front to the market-house, than has been seen in any place. For it is the generous spirit of Negotius to do nothing in a mean way.

If you ask what it is, that has secured Negotius from all scandalous vices, it is the same thing that has kept him from all strictness of devotion, it is his great business. Hehas always had too many important things in his head, his thoughts have been too much employed to fuffer him to fall either into any courses of rakery, or to feel the necessity of an inward, folid piety.

For this reason he hears of the pleasures of debauchery, and the pleasures of piety, with the same indifferency; and has no more desire of living in the one than in the other, because neither of them consist with that turn of mind and multiplicity of business, which are his hap-

If Negotius was asked, what it is that he drives at in life? he would be as much at a loss for an answer, as if he was asked, what any other person is thinking of. For though he always seems to himself to know what he is doing, and has many things in his head, which are the motives of his actions; yet he cannot tell you of any one general end of life, that he has chosen with deliberation, as being truly worthy of all his labour and pains.

He has several confused notions in his head, which have been a long time there; such as these, viz. That it is something great to have more business than other people, to have more dealings upon his hands than an hundred of the same profession; to grow continually richer and richer, and to raise an immense fortune before he dies. The thing that seems to give Negotius the greatest life and spirit, and to be most in his thoughts, is an expectation that he shall die richer than any of his business ever did.

The generality of people, when they think of happiness, think upon Negotius, in whose life every instance of happiness is supposed to meet; sober, prudent, rich, prosperous, generous, and charitable.

Let us now therefore look at this condition in another but truer light.

Let it be supposed, that this same Negotius was a painful, laborious man, every day deep in variety of affairs; that he neither drank nor debauched, but was sober and regular in his business. Let it be supposed that he grew old in this course of trading; and that the end and design of all this labour, and care and application to business, was only this, that he might die possessed

and as many great coats.

Let it be supposed, that the sober part of the world say of him when he is dead, that he was a great and happy man, a thorough master of business, and had acquired an hundred thousand pair of boots and spurs when he died.

Now if this was really the case, I believe it would be readily granted, that a life of such business was as poor and ridiculous as any that can be invented. But it would puzzle any one to shew, that a man that has spent all his time and thoughts in business and hurrry, that he might die, as it is said, worth an hundred thousand pounds, is any whit wifer than he, who has taken the same pains to have as many pair of boots and spurs when he leaves the world.

For if the temper and state of our fouls be our whole state; if the only end of life be to die as free from sin, and as exalted in virtue as we can; if naked as we came, so naked are we to return, and to stand a trial before Christ, and his holy angels, for everlasting happiness or misery; what can it possibly signify what a man had, or had not, in this world? What can it signify what you call those things which a man has left behind him; whether you call them his, or any one's else; whether you call them an hundred thousand pounds, or an hundred thousand pair of boots and spurs? I say, call them; for the things signify no more to him than the names.

Now it is easy to see the folly of a life thus spent, to furnish a man with such a number of boots and spurs. But yet there needs no better faculty of seeing, no siner understanding, to see the folly of a life spent in making a man a professor of ten towns before he dies.

For if when he has got all his towns, or all his boots, his foul is to go to his own place among feparate spirits, and his body be laid by in a collin, till the last trumpet calls him to judgment; where the enquiry will be, how humbly, how devoutly, how purely, how meekly, how piously, how charitably, how heavenly we have spoke, thought and acted, whilst we were in the body; how can we say, that he who has wore out his life in raising an hundred thousand pounds, has acted wifer for himself, than he who has had the same care to procure an hundred thousand of any thing else?

But farther: Let it now be supposed, that Negotius, when he first entered into business, happening to read the Gospel with attention, and eyes open, found that he had a much greater business upon his hands, than that to which he had served an apprenticeship: that there were things which belong to man of much greater importance than all that our eyes can see; so glorious, as to deserve all our thoughts; so dangerous, as to need all our care; and so certain, as never to deceive the faithful behavior

Let it be supposed, that from reading this book, he had discovered that his soul was more to him than his body; that it was better to grow in the virtues of the soul, than to have a large body or a sull purse; that it was better to be fit for heaven, than to have a variety of sine houses upon the earth; that it was better to secure an everlasting happines, than to have plenty of things which he cannot keep; better to live in habits of humility, piety, devotion, charity, and self-denial, than to die unprepared for judgment; better to be most like our Saviour, or some eminent saint, than to excel all the tradesmen in the world, in business and bulk of fortune.

Let it be supposed, that Negotius believing these things to be true, entirely devoted himself to God at his first setting out in the world, resolving to pursue his business no farther than was consistent with great devotion, humility, and self-denial; and for no other ends, but to provide himself with a sober subsistence, and to do all the good that he could, to the souls and bodies of his fellow creatures.

Let it therefore be fupposed, that instead of the continual hurry of business, he was frequent in his retirements, and a strift observer of all the hours of prayer; that instead of restless desires after more riches, his soul had been full of the love of God and heavenly affection, constantly watching against worldly tempers, and always aspiring after divine grace; that instead of worldly cares and contrivances, he was busy in fortifying his foul against all approaches of fin; that instead of costly shew and expensive generosity of a splendid life, he loved and exercised all instances of humility and lowliness; that instead of great treats and full tables, his house only furnished a sober refreshment to those that wanted it.

Let it be supposed, That his contentment kept him free from all kinds of envy. That his piety made him thankful to God in all crosses and disappointments. That his charity kept him from being rich, by a continual distribution to all objects of compassion.

Now had this been the christian spirit of Negotius, can any one say, that he had lost the true joy and happiness of life, by thus conforming to the spirit, and living up to the hopes of the Gospel.

Can it be faid, that a life made exemplary by fuch virtues as thefe, which keep heaven always in our fight, which both delight and exalt the foul here, and prepare it for the prefence of God hereafter, must be poor and dull, if compared to that of heaping up riches, which can neither stay with us, nor we with them?

It would be endless to multiply examples of this kind, to shew you how little is lost, and how much is gained, by introducing a strict and exact piety into every condition of human life.

I shall now therefore leave it to your own meditation, to carry this way of thinking farther, hoping that you are enough directed by what is here said, to convince yourself, that a true and exalted piety is so far from rendering any life dull and tiresome, that it is the only joy and happiness of every condition in the world.

Imagine to yourfelf fome person in a consumption, or any other lingering distemper that was incurable.

If you was to fee such a man wholly intent upon doing every thing in the spirit of religion, making the wifest use of all his time, fortune, and abilities. If he was for carrying every duty of piety to its greatest height, and striving to have all the advantage that could be had from the remainder of his life. If he avoided all business, but such as was necessary; if he was averse to all the follies and vanities of the world, had no taste for finery and shew, but sought for all his comfort in the hopes and expectations of religion; you would certainly commend his prudence, you would fay, that he had taken the right method to make himfelf as joyful and happy, as any one can be in a ftate of fuch infirmity.

On the other hand, if you should fee the same perfon, with trembling hands, short breath, thin jaws, and hollow eyes, wholly intent upon business and bargains, as long as he could speak. If you should see him pleafed with fine cloaths, when he could scarce stand to be dressed, and laying out his money in horses and dogs, rather than purchase the prayers of the poor for his soul, which was so soon to be separated from his body, you would certainly condemn him, as a weak, filly man.

Now as it is eafy to fee the reasonableness, the wisdom and happiness of a religious spirit in a consumptive man; so if you pursue the same way of thinking, you will as easily perceive the same wisdom and happiness of a pious temper in every other state of life.

For how foon will every man that is in health, be in the flate of him that is in a confumption? How foon will he want all the fame comforts and fatisfactions of religion, which every dying man wants?

And if it be wife and happy to live pioufly, because we have not above a year to live, is it not being more wife, and making curselves more happy, because we may have more years to come? If one year of piety before we die, is so desirable, is not more years of piety much more desirable?

If a man had five fixed years to live, he could not possibly think at all, without intending to make the best use of them all. When he saw his stay so short in this world, he must needs think that this was not a world for him; and when he saw how near he was to another world, that was eternal, he must surely think it very necessary to be very diligent in preparing himself for it.

New as reasonable as piety appears in such a circumfrance of life, it is yet more reasonable in every circum-france of life, to every thinking man.

For who but a madman can reckon that he has five years certain to come?

And if it be reasonable and necessary to deny our worldly worldly tempers, and live wholly unto God, because we are certain that we are to die at the end of five years; furely it must be more reasonable and necessary for us to live in the same spirit, because we have no certainty that we shall live five weeks

Again, if we were to add twenty years to the five, which is in all probability more than will be added to the lives of many people who are at man's estate; what a poor thing is this! how small a difference is there between five, and twenty-five years?

It is faid, that a day is with God as a thoufand years, and a thoufand years as one day; because, in regard to his eternity, this difference is as nothing.

Now as we are all created to be eternal, to live in an endless succession of ages upon ages, where thousands, and millions of thousands of years will have no proportion to our everlasting life in God; so with regard to this eternal state, which is our real state, twenty-sive years is as poor a pittance as twenty-sive days.

Now we can never make any true judgment of time as it relates to us, without confidering the true flate of our duration. If we are temporary beings, then a little time may justly be called a great deal in relation to us; but if we are eternal beings, then the difference of a few years is as nothing.

If we were to suppose three different sorts of rational beings, all of different but fixed duration, one fort that lived certainly only a month, the other a year, and the third an hundred years.

Now if these things were to meet together, and talk about time, they must talk in a very different language; half an hour to those that were to live but a month, must be a very different thing, to what it is to those who are to live an hundred years.

As therefore time is thus different a thing with regard to the flate of those who enjoy it, so if we would know what time is with regard to ourselves, we must consider our state.

Now fince our eternal flate, is as certainly ours, as our prefent flate; fince we are as certainly to live for ever, as we now live at all; it is plain that we cannot judge of the value of any particular time, abs to us, but by comparing it to that eternal duration for which we are created.

If you would know, what five years fignify to a being that was to live an hundred, you must compare five to an hundred, and see what proportion it bears to it, and then you will judge right.

So if you would know what twenty years fignify to a fon of Adam, you must compare it, not to a million of ages, but an eternal duration, to which no number of millions bears any proportion; and then you will judge right by finding nothing.

Confider therefore this; how would you condemn the folly of a man, that should lose his share of future glory, for the sake of being rich, or great, or praised, or delighted in any enjoyment, only one poor day before he was to die!

But if the time will come, when a number of years will feem lefs to every one, than a day does now; what a condemnation must it then be, if eternal happiness should appear to be lost, for something less than the enjoyment of a day!

Why does a day feem a trifle to us now? It is because we have years to set against it. It is the duration of years that makes it appear as nothing.

What a trifle therefore must the years of a man's age appear, when they are forced to be set against eternity, when there shall be nothing but eternity to compare them with!

Now this will be the case of every man, as soon as he is out of the body; he will be forced to forget the distinctions of days and years, and to measure time, not by the course of the sun, by setting it against eternity.

As the fixed stars, by reason of our being placed at such distance from them, appear but as so many points; so when we are placed in eternity, shall look back upon all time, it will all appear but as a moment.

Then a luxury, an indulgence, a profperity, a greatness, of fifty years, will feem to every one that looks back upon it, as the same poor short enjoyment, as if he had been snatched away in his first sin.

These few reflections upon time, are only to shew

how poorly they think, how miferably they judge, who are lefs careful of an eternal state, because they may be at some years distance from it, than they would be, if they knew they were within a few weeks of it.

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning that part of devotion which relates to times and hours of prayer. Of daily early prayer in the morning. How we are to improve our forms of prayer, and how to increase the spirit of devotion.

AVING in the foregoing chapters shewn the necessity of a devout spirit, or habit of mind in every part of our common life, in the discharge of all our business, in the use of all the gifts of God: I come now to consider that part of devotion, which relates to times and hours of prayer.

I take it for granted, that every Christian, that is in health, is up early in the morning; for it is much more reasonable to suppose a person up early, because he is a Caristian, than because he is a labourer, or a tradesman, or a servant, or has business that wants him.

We raturally conceive some abhorrence of a man that is in bed, when he should be at his labour, or in his shop. We cannot tell how to think any thing good of him, who is such a slave to drowsiness, as to neglect his business for it.

Let this therefore teach us to conceive, how odious we must appear in the sight of heaven, if we are in bed, shut up in sleep and darkness, when we should be praising God; and are such slaves to drowfiness, as to neglect our devotions for it.

For if he is to be blamed as a flothful drone, that rather chuses the lazy indulgence of sleep, than to perform his proper share of worldly business; how much is he to be reproached, that had rather lie folded up in a bed, a bed, than be raifing up his heart to God in acts of praise and adoration?

Prayer is the nearest approach to God and the higheft enjoyment of him, that we are capable of in this

It is the noblest exercise of the foul, the most exalted use of our best faculties, and the highest estimation of the bleffed inhabitants of heaven.

When our hearts are full of God, fending up holy defires to the throne of grace, we are then in our highest state, we are upon the utmost heights of human greatness; we are not before kings and princes, but in the prefence and audience of the Lord of all the world, and can be no higher, till death is fwallowed up in glory.

On the other hand, fleep is the poorest, dullest refreshment of the body, that is so far from being intended as an enjoyment, that we are forced to receive it either in a flate of infentibility, or in the folly of dreams.

Sleep is fuch a dull, flupid flate of existence, that even amongst mere animals, we despife them most, which are most drowfy. He therefore that chuses to enlarge the flothful inclulgence of fleep, rather than be early at his devotions to God; chufes the dulleft refreshment of the body, before the highest, noblest employment of the foul; he chuses that state, which is a repreach to mere animals, rather than that exercise, which is the glory of angels.

You will perhaps fay, though you rife late, yet you are always careful of your devotions when you are up.

It may be fo. But what then? Is it well done of you to rife late, because you pray when you are up? Is it pardonable to waite great part of the day in bed because some time after you fay your prayers?

It is as much your duty to rife to gray, as to pray when you are rifen. And if you are late at your prayers, you offer to God the prayers of an idle, flothful, worshipper, that lifes to prayers, as idle fervants rife to their labour.

Farther, if you fancy that you are careful of your devotions, when you are up, though it be your custom to rise late, you deceive yourself; for you cannot perform your devotions as you ought. For he that cannot deny himself this drowly indulgence, but must pass away good part of the morning in it, is no more prepared for prayer when he is up, than he is prepared for fafting, abitinence, or any other felf-denial. He may indeed more eafily read over a form of prayer, than he can perform these duties; but he is no more disposed to enter into the true spirit of prayer, than he is disposed to fasting. For fleep thus indulged, gives a foftness and idleness to all our tempers, and makes us unable to relish any thing, but what fuits with an idle state of mind, and gratifies our natural tempers as fleep does. So that a person that is a slave to this idleness, is in the same temper when he is up; and though he is not afleep, yet he is under the effects of it: and every thing that is idle, indulgent, or fenfual, pleases him for the same reason that fleep pleafes him; and on the other hand, every thing that requires care, or trouble, or felf-denial, is hateful to him, for the same reason that he hates to rife. He that places any happiness in this morning indulgence, would be glad to have all the day made happy in the fame manner; though not with fleep, yet with fuch enjoyment as gratify and indulge the body in the fame manner as fleep does; or at least, with fuch as come as near to it as they can. The remembrance of a warm bed is in his mind all the day, and he is glad when he is not one of those that sit starving in a Church.

Now you do not imagine that fuch a one can truly mortify that body which he thus indulges; yet you might as well think this, as that he can truly perform his devotions; or live in fuch a drowfy state of indulgence, and yet relish the joys of a spiritual life.

For furely no one will pretend to fay, that he knows and feels the true happiness of prayer, who does not think it worth his while to be early at it.

It is not possible in nature for an Epicure to be truly devout; he must renounce this habit of sensuality, before he can relish the happiness of devotion.

Now he that turns fleep into an idle indulgence, does as much to corrupt and diforder his foul, to make it a flave to bodily appetites, and keep it incapable of all

devout and heavenly tempers, as he that turns the neceffities of eating into a course of indulgence.

A person that eats and drinks too much, does not feel such effects from it, as those do who live in notorious instances of gluttony and intemperance; but yet his course of indulgence, though it be not scandalous in the eyes of the world, nor such as torments his own conscience, is a great and constant hindrance to his improvement in virtue; it gives him eyes that see not, and ears that hear not; it creates a sensuality in the soul, increases the power of bodily passions, and makes him incapable of entering into the true spirit of religion.

Now this is the case of those who waste their time in sleep; it does not disorder their lives, or wound their consciences, as notorious acts of intemperance do; but like any other more moderate course of indulgence, it silently, and by smaller degrees, wears away the spirit of religion, and sinks the soul into a state of dulness

If you confider devotion only as a time of fo much prayer, you may perhaps perform it, though you live in this daily indulgence; but if you confider it as a flate of the heart, as a lively fervour of the foul, that is deeply affected with a fenfe of his own mifery and infirmities, and defiring the fpirit of God more than all things in the world, you will find that the fpirit of indulgence, and the fpirit of prayer, cannot fubfift together. Mortification of all kinds, is the very life and foul of piety: but he that has not fo fmall a degree of it, as to be able to be early at his prayers, can have no reason to think that he has taken up his crofs, and is following Christ.

What conquest has he got over himself? What right hand has he cut off? What trials is he prepared for? What facrifice is he ready to offer unto God? who cannot be so cruel to himself, as to rise to prayer at such time, as the drudging part of the world are content to rise to their labour.

Some people will not foruple to tell you, that they indulge themselves in sleep, because they have nothing to do; and that if they had either business or pleasure to rise to they would not lose so much of their time in sleep.

Ľu

But fuch people must be told, that they mistake the matter; that they have a great deal of business to do; they have a burdened heart to change; they have the whole spirit of religion to get. For surely, he that thinks devotion to be of less moment than business or pleasure; or that he has nothing to do, because nothing but his prayers want him, may be justly said to have the whole spirit of religion to seek.

You must not therefore consider, how small a crime it is to rise late, but you must consider how great a mifery it is to want the spirit of religion; to have a heart not rightly affected with prayer; and to live in such softness and idleness, as makes you incapable of the most fundamental duties of a truly christian and spiri-

This is the right way of judging of the crime of wasting great part of your time in bed.

You mult not consider the thing barely in itself, but what it proceeds from; what virtues it shows to be wanting; what vices it naturally strengthens. For every habit of this kind discovers the state of the soul, and plainly flews the whole turn of your mind.

If our bleffed Lord used to pray early before day; if he spent whole nights in prayer; if the devout Anna was day and night in the temple: if St Paul and Silas at midnight sang praises unto God; if the primitive Christians, for several hundred years, beside their hours of prayer in the day-time, met publicly in the churches at midnight, to join in psalms and prayers, is it not certain that these practices shewed the state of their heart? Are they not so many plain proofs of the whole turn of their minds.

And if you live in a contrary state, washing great part of every day in sleep, thinking any time soon enough to be at your prayers; is it not equally certain, that this practice as much shews the state of your heart, and the whole turn of your mind?

So that if this indulgence is your way of life, you have as much reason to believe yourself destitute of the true spirit of devotion, as you have to believe the apostles and saints of the primitive Church were truly devout. For as their way of life was a demonstration of their devotion, fo a contrary way of life is as strong a proof of a want of devotion.

When you read the fcriptures, you fee a religion that is all life, and fpirit, and joy in God; that fuppofes our foul rifen from earthly defires, and bodily indulgences, to prepare for another body, another world, and other enjoyments. You fee Christians represented as temples of the Holy Ghost, as children of the day, as candidates for an eternal crown, as watchful virgins, that have their lamps always burning in expectation of the bridegroom. But can he be thought to have this joy in God, this care of eternity, this watchful spirit, who has not zeal enough to rife to his prayers?

When you look into the writings and lives of the first christians, you fee the same spirit that you see in the scriptures. All is reality, life, and action. Watchings and prayers, self-denial and mortification, was the common business of their lives.

From that time to this, there has been no person like them, eminent for piety, who has not, like them, been eminent for felf-denial and mortification. This is the only royal way that leads to a kingdom.

But how far are you from this way of life, or rather how contrary to it, if, instead of imitating their austerity and mortification, you cannot so much as renounce so poor an indulgence, as to be able to rise to your prayers? If self-denials and bodily sufferings, if watchings and fastings, will be marks of glory at the day of judgment, where must we hide our heads, that have slumbered away our time in sloth and softness?

You perhaps now find fome pretences, to excuse yourself from that severity of satting and self-denial, which the first Christians practised. You fancy that human nature is grown weaker, and that the difference of climates may make it not possible for you to observe their methods of self-denial and austerity, in these colder countries.

But all this is but pretence; for the change is not in the outward state of things, but in the inward state of our minds. When there is the same spirit in us, that there was in the apostles and primitive christians, when we feel the weight of religion, as they did; when we have

have their faith and hope, we shall take up our cross and deny ourselves, and live in such methods of mortification as they did.

Had St Paul lived in a cold country, had he had a conflitution made weak with a fickly flomach, and often infirmities, he would have done as he advised Timothy, he would have mixed a little wine with his water.

But still he would have lived in a state of self-denial and mortification. He would have given this same account of himself. "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly, so sight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body and bring it unto subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myfelf should be a cast away."

After all, let it now be supposed, that you imagine there is no necessity for you to be so sober and vigilant, so fearful of yourself, so watchful over your passions, so apprehensive of danger, so careful of your salvation, as the apostles were. Let it be supposed, that you imagine that you want less self-denial and mortification, to subdue your bodies, and purify your souls, than they wanted; that you need not have your loins girt, and your lamps burning as they had, will you therefore live in a quite contrary state? Will you make your life as constant a course of softness and indulgence, as theirs was of strictness and self-denial.

If, therefore, you should think that you have time sufficient, both for prayer and other duties, though you rise late; yet let me pertuade you to rise early, as an instance of self-denial. It is so small a one, that if you cannot comply with it, you have no reason to think yourself capable of any other.

If I was to defire you not to fludy the gratification of your palate, in the niceties of meats and drink, I would not infilt much upon the crime of waiting your money in fuch a way, though it be a great one; but I would defire you to renounce fuch a way of life, because it supports you in such a state of sensuality and indulgence, as renders you incapable of relishing the most essential doctrines of religion.

For the same reason, I do not insist much on the crime H:3

of wasting so much of your time in sleep, though it be a great one; but I desire you to renounce this indulgence, because it gives a softness and idleness to your soul; and is so contrary to that lively, zealous, watchful, self-denying spirit, which was not only the spirit of Christ and his apostles, the spirits of all the faints and martyrs which have ever been amongst men, but must be the spirit of all those who would not sink in the common corruption of the world.

Here therefore we must fix our charge against this practice; we must blame it, not as having this or that particular evil, but as a general habit that extends itself through our whole spirit, and supports a state of mind that is wholly wrong.

It is contrary to piety; not as accidental flips and missakes in life are contrary to it, but in such a manner, as an ill habit of body is contrary to health.

On the other hand, if you was to rife early every morning, as an instance of self-denial, as a method of renouncing indulgence, as a means of redeeming your time, and sitting your spirit for prayer, you would find mighty advantages from it. This method, though it seems such a small circumstance of life, would in all probability be a means of great piety. It would keep it constantly in your head, that softness and idleness were to be avoided, that felf-denial was a part of christianity. It would teach you to exercise power over yourself, and make you able by degrees to renounce other pleasures and tempers that war against the foul.

This one rule would teach you to think of others; it would dispose your mind to exactness, and be very likely to bring the remaining part of the day under rules of prudence and devotion.

But above all, one certain benefit from this method you will be fure of having, it will beft fit and prepare you for the reception of the holy spirit. When you thus begin the day in the spirit of renouncing sleep, because you are to renounce softness, and redeem your time; this disposition, as it puts your heart into a good state, so it will procure the assistance of the Holy Spirit; what is so planted and watered, will certainly have an increase from God. You will then speak from your heart, your foul will be awake, your prayers will refresh you like meat and drink, you will feel what you say, and begin to know what faints and holy men have meant, by feryours of devotion.

He that is thus prepared for prayer, who rifes with these dispositions, is in a very different state from him, who has no rules of this kind: who rifes by chance, as he happens to be weary of his bed, or is able to sleep no longer. If such a one prays only with his mouth; if his heart feels nothing of that which he says; if his prayers are only things of course; if they are a lifeless form of words, which he only repeats because they are soon said, there is nothing to be wondered at in all this: for such dispositions are the natural effect of such a state of life.

Hoping therefore, that you are now enough convinced of the necessity of rising early to your prayers, I shall proceed to lay before you a method of daily prayer.

I do not take upon me to preferibe to you the use of any particular forms of prayer, but only to shew the necessity of praying at such times, and in such a manner.

You will here find fome helps, how to furnish yourself with such forms of prayer as shall be useful to you. And if you are such a proficient in the spirit of devotion, that your heart is always ready to pray in its own language, in this case I press no necessity of borrowed forms

For though I think a form of prayer very necessary and expedient for public worship, yet if any one can find a better way of raising his heart unto God in private, than by prepared forms of prayer, I have nothing to object against it; my design being only to assist and direct such as stand in need of assistance.

Thus much, I believe, is certain, that the generality of Christians ought to use forms of prayer, at all the regular times of prayer. It seems right for every one to begin with a form of prayer; and if, in the midst of devotions, he finds his heart ready to break forth into new and higher strains of devotion, he should leave his form for a while, and follow those fervours of his heart, till it again wants the affistance of his useful petitions.

This feems to be the true liberty of private devotion; it should be under the direction of some form; but not so tied down to it, but that it may be free to take such new expressions, as its present fervours happen to surnish it with; which sometimes are more affecting, and carry the soul more powerfully to God, than any expressions that were ever used before.

All people that have ever made any reflections upon what passes in their own hearts, must know that they are mighty changeable in regard to devotion. Sometimes our hearts are so awakened, have such strong apprehensions of the divine presence, are so full of deep compunction for our sins, that we cannot confess them in any language, but that of tears.

Sometimes the light of God's countenance shines so bright upon us, we see so far into the invisible world, we are so affected with the wonders of the love and goodness of God, that our hearts worship and adore in a language higher than that of words, and we feel transports of devction, which only can be felt.

On the other hand, fometimes we are fo funk into our bodies, so dull and unaffected with that which concerns our souls, that our hearts are as much too low for our prayers; we cannot keep pace with our forms of confession, or feel half of that in our hearts, which we have in our mouths; we thank and praise God with forms of words, but our hearts have little or no share in them.

It is therefore highly necessary to provide against this inconstancy of our hearts, by having at hand such forms of prayer, as may best suit us when our hearts are in their best state, and also be most likely to raise and stir them up, when they are sunk into dulness. For as words have a power of affecting our hearts on all occasions, as the same thing differently expressed has different effects upon our minds; so it is reasonable, that we should make this advantage of language, and provide ourselves with such forms of expressions, as are most likely to move and culiven our souls, and fill them with sentiments suitable to them.

The first thing that you are to do, when you are upon your knees, is to shut your eyes, and with a short silence let your soul place itself in the presence of God; that is, you are to use this, or some other better method, to separate yourself from all common thoughts, and make your hearts as sensible as you can of the divine presence.

Now if this recollection of fpirit is necessary, as who can say it is not? then how poorly must they perform their devotions, who are always in a hurry; who begin them in haste, and hardly allow themselves time to repeat their very form, with any gravity or attention? Theirs is properly saying prayers, instead of praying.

To proceed; if you was to use yourself (as far as you can) to pray always in the same place; if you was to referve that place for devotion, and not allow yourfelf to do any thing common in it; if you was never to be there yourfelf, but in times of devotion; if any little room (or if that cannot be) if any particular part of a room was thus used, this kind of confectation of it, as a place holy unto God, would have an effect upon your mind, and difpofe you to fuch tempers, as would very much affift your devotion. For by having a place thus facred in your room, it would in some measure refemble a chapel, or house of God. This would dispose you to be always in the spirit of religion, when you was there; and fill you with wife and holy thoughts, when you was by yourfelf. Your own apartment would raife in your mind fuch fentiments, as you have, when you stand near an altar; and you would be afraid of thinking or doing any thing that was foolish near that place, which is the place of prayer, and holy intercourse with God.

When you begin your petitions, use such various expressions of the attributes of God, as may make you most sensible of the greatness and power of the divine Nature.

Begin therefore in words like these: "O Being of all beings, Fountain of all light and glory, gracious Father of men and angels, whose universal Spirit is every where present, giving life, and light, and joy, H 5 to all angels in heaven, and all creatures upon earth,"

For these representations of the divine attributes, which shew us in some degree the majesty and greatness of God, are an excellent means of raising our hearts into lively acts of worship and adoration.

What is the reason that most people are so much affected with this petition in the burial service of our Church: "Yet, O Lord God most holy, O Lord most mighty, O holy and most merciful Saviour, deliver us not into the bitter pains of eternal death?" It is, because the joining together so many great expressions, gives such a description of the greatness of the Divine Majesty, as naturally affects every sensible mind.

A though therefore prayer does not confift in fine words, or fludied expressions; yet as words speak to the toul, as they have a certain power of raising thoughts in the foul; so those words which speak of God in the highest manner, which most fully express the power and presence of God, which raise thoughts in the foul most suitable to the greatness and providence of God, are the most useful, and most edifying in our prayers

When you direct any of your petitions to our bleffed Lord, let it be in fome expressions of this kind: "O Saviour of the world, God of God, Light of Light; thou that art the Erightness of thy Father's Glory, and the express Image of his Person; thou that art the Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and End of all things: thou that hast destroyed the power of the devil; thou that hast overcome death; thou that art entered into the Holy of holies; that sittest at the right hand of the Father; that art high above all thrones and principalities, that makest intercession for all the world; thou that art the judge of the quick and dead; thou that wilt speedily come down in thy Father's glory, to reward all men according to their works, be thou my light and my peace," &c.

For such representations, which describe so many characters of our Saviour's nature and power, are not only proper acts of adoration, but will, if they are repeated with attention, fill our hearts with the highest fervours of true devotion.

BV

Again, If you ask any particular grace of our bleffed

Lord, let it be in some manner like this:

"O holy Jefus, fon of the most high God, thou that was fcourged at a pillar, stretched and nailed on a cross for the fins of the world, unite me to thy crofs, and fill my foul with thy holy, humble, and fuffering fpirit. O Fountain of mercy, thou that didft fave the thief upon the crofs, fave me from the guilt of a finful life: thou that didst cast seven devils out of Mary Magdalene, cast out of my heart, all evil thoughts, and wicked tempers. O giver of life, thou that didit raife Lazarus from the dead, raife up my foul from the death and darkness of fin. Thou that didft give to thy Apostles power over unclean spirits, give me power over mine own heart. Thou that didft appear unto thy disciples when the doors were flut, do thou appear to me in the fecret 2partment of my heart. Thou that didst cleanse the lepers, heal the fick, and give fight to the blind, cleanfe my heart, heal the diforders of my foul, and fill me with heavenly light.

Now these kind of appeals have a double advantage; first, as they are so many proper acts of our faith, whereby we not only shew our belief of the miracles of Christ, but turn them at the same time into so many instances of worship and adoration.

Secondly, As they strengthen and increase the faith of our prayers, by presenting to our mind so many instances of that power and goodness, which we call upon for our own assistance.

For he that appeals to Christ, as casting out devils, and raising the dead, has then a powerful motive in his hand to pray earnestly, and depend faithfully upon his affiliance.

Again, In order to fill your prayers with excellent strains of devotion, it may be of use to you to observe this farther rule:

When at any time, either in reading the Scripture or any book of Piety, you meet with a pallage that more than ordinarily affects your mind, and feems as it were to give your heart a new motion towards God, you should try to turn it into the form of a petition, and then give it a place in your prayers.

H6

By this means, you would be often improving your prayers, and floring yourfelf with proper forms of making the defires of your heart known unto God.

At all the flated hours of prayer, it will be of great benefit to you, to have fomething fixed, and fomething at liberty, in your devotions.

You should have some fixed subject, which is constantly to be the chief matter of your prayer at that parcular time; and yet have liberty to add such other petitions, as your condition may then require.

For inflance: As the morning is to you the beginning of new life; as God has then given you a new enjoyment of yourfelf, and a fresh entrance into the world, it is highly proper that your first devotions should be a praise and thanksgiving to God, as for a new creation; and that you should offer and devote body and soul, all that you are, and all that you have, to his fervice and glory.

Receive therefore every day, as a refurrection from seath, as a new enjoyment of life; meet every rifing fun with fuch fentiments of God's goodnefs, as if you had feen it, and all things new created upon your account; and under the fenfe of fo great a bleffing, let your joyful heart, praife and magnify fo good and glorious a Creator.

Let therefore praise and thanksgiving, and oblation of yourself unto God, be always the fixed and certain subject of your first prayers in the morning; and then take the liberty of adding such other devotions, as the accidental difference of your state, or the accidental difference of your heart, shall then make most needful and expedient for you.

For one of the greatest benefits of private devotion, confists in rightly adapting our prayers to these two conditions, the difference of our state, and the difference of our hearts.

By the difference of our state, is meant the difference of our external state or condition, as of sickness, health, pains, losses, disappointments, troubles, particular mercies or judgments from God; all forts of kindnesses, injuries, or reproaches from other people.

Now as these are great parts of our state of life, as

they make great difference in it, by continually changing; fo our devotion will be made doubly beneficial to us, when it watches to receive and fanctify all these changes of our state, and turns them all into so many occasions of a more particular application to God of such thanksgivings, such resignation, such petitions as our present state more especially requires.

And he that makes every change in his state, a reason of presenting unto God some particular petitions suitable to that change, will soon find, that he has taken an excellent means, not only of praying with servour, but of living as he prays.

The next condition, to which we are always to adapt fome part of our prayers, is the difference of our hearts; by which is meant the different flate of the tempers of our hearts, as of love, joy, peace, tranquillity; dulnefs and drynefs of fpirit, anxiety, difcontent, motions of envy and ambition, dark and difconfolate thoughts, refentments, fretfulnefs and peevifn tempers.

Now as these tempers, through the weakness of our nature will have their succession more or less, even in pious minds; so we should constantly make the present state of our heart, the reason of some particular application to God.

If we are in the delightful calm of fweet and eafy passions, of love and joy in God, we should then offer the grateful tribute of thanksgiving to God, for the possession of so much happiness, thanksully owing and acknowledging him as the bountiful Giver of it all.

If on the other hand, we feel ourselves laden with heavy passions, with dulness of spirit, anxiety and uneasiness, we must then look up to God in acts of humility, confessing our unworthiness, opening our troubles to him, beseeching him in his good time to lessen the weight of our infirmities, and to deliver us from such passions as oppose the purity and perfection of our fouls.

Now by thus watching, and attending to the present state of our hearts, and suiting some of our petitions exactly to their wants, we shall not only be well acquainted with the diforders of our fouls, but also be well exercised in the method of curing them.

By this prudent and wife application of our prayers, we shall get all the relief from them that is possible; and the very changeableness of our hearts, will prove a means of exercising a greater variety of holy tempers.

Now by all that has here been faid, you will eafily perceive, that perfons careful of the greatest benefit of prayer, ought to have a great share in the forming and composing their own devotions.

As to that part of their prayers, which is always fixed to one certain subject, in that they may use the help of some forms composed by other persons; but in that part of their prayers, which they are always to suit to the present state of their life, and the present state of their heart. There they must let the sense of their own condition help them to such kinds of petition, thanksgiving, or resignation, as their present state more especially requires,

Happy are they, who have this business and employment upon their hands!

And new, if people of leifure, whether men or women, who are fo much at a lofs how to difpose of their time, who are forced into poor contrivances, idle visits, and ridiculous diversions, merely to get rid of hours that hang heavily upon their hands; if fuch were to appoint fome certain spaces of their time, to the study of devotion, fearthing after all the means and helps to attain a devout ipirit. If they were to collect the best forms of devotion, to use themselves to transcribe the finest passages of scripture prayers; if they were to collect the devotions, confessions, petitions, praises, resignations, and thankfgivings, which are feattered up and down in the Pfalms, and range them under proper heads, as fo much proper fuel for the flame of their own devotion. If their minds were often thus employed, fometimes meditating upon them, fometimes getting them by heart, and making them as habitual as their own thoughts, how fervently would they pray, who came thus prepared to prayer?

And how much better would it be, to make this bemefit of leifure time, than to be dully and idly loft in the poor importinences of a playing, vifiting, wandering life?

How much better would it be, to be thus furnished with hymns and anthems of the faints, and teach their fouls to ascend to God; than to corrupt, bewilder and confound their heart, with the wild fancies, the luffful thoughts of lewd poets?

Now though people of leifure feem called more particularly to this fludy of devotion, yet perfons of much bufiness or labour, must not think themselves excused from this or some better method of improving their devotion.

For the greater their business is, the more need they have of some such method as this, to prevent its power over their hearts; to secure them from sinking into worldly tempers, and preserve a sense and taste of heavenly things in their minds. And a little time regularly and constantly employed to any one use or end, will do great things, and produce mighty effects.

And it is for want of confidering devotion in this light, as fomething that is to be nurfed and cherifhed with care, as fomething that is to be made part of our business, that is to be improved with care and contrivance, by art and method, and a diligent use of the best helps; it is for want of confidering it in this light, that so many people are so little benefited by it, and live and die strangers to that spirit of devotion, which by a prudent use of proper means, they might have enjoyed in a high degree.

For though the fpirit of devotion is the gift of God, and not attainable by any mere power of our own, yet it is mostly given, and never withheld, from those, who by a wife and diligent use of proper means, prepare themselves for the reception of it.

And it is amazing to fee how eagerly men employ their parts, their fagacity, time, study, application, and exercise; how all helps are called to their assistance, when any thing is intended and defired in worldly matters; and how dull, negligent, and unimproved they are, how little they use their parts, sagacity, and abilities, to raise and increase their devotion!

Mundanus is a man of excellent parts, and clear apprehension prehension. He is well advanced in age, and has made a great figure in business. Every part of trade and business that has fallen in his way, has had some improvement from him; and he is always contriving to carry every method of doing any thing well, to its greatest height. Mundanus aims at the greatest perfection in every thing. The soundness and strength of his mind, and his just way of thinking upon things, makes him intent upon removing all impersections.

He that can tell you all the defects and errors in all the common methods, whether of trade, building, or improving land or manufactures. The clearness and strength of his understanding, which he is constantly improving, by continual exercise in these matters, by often digesting his thoughts in writing, and trying every thing every way, has rendered him a great master of most concerns in human life.

Thus has Mundanus gone on, increasing his knowledge and judgment, as fast as his years came upon him.

The one only thing, which is not fallen under his improvement, nor received any benefit from his judicious mind, is his devotion: This is just in the same poor state it ws, when he was only fix years of age: and the old man prays now, in that little form of words, which his mother used to hear him repeat night and morning.

Thus Mundanus, that hardly ever faw the poorest utensil, or ever took the meanest trisle into his hand, without considering how it might be made or used to better advantage, has gone all his life long praying in the same manner as when he was a child; without ever considering how much better or oftener he might pray; without considering how improveable the spirit of devotion is, how many helps a wife and reasonable man may call to his assistance, and how necessary it is, that our prayers should be enlarged, varied, and suited to the particular state and condition of our lives.

If Mundanus fees a book of devotion, he paffes it by, as he does a fpeling-book, because he remembers that he learned to pray so many years ago under his mother,

when he learnt to fpell,

Now

Now how poor and pitiable is the conduct of this man of fenfe, who has fo much judgment and underflanding in every thing, but that which is the whole wifdom of man?

And how miferably do many people, more or lefs imitate this conduct?

All which feems to be owing to a strange infatuated ftate of negligence, which keeps people from confidering what devotion is. For if they did but once proceed for far, as to reflect about it, or ask themselves any questions concerning it, they would foon fee, that the spirit of devotion was like any other fense or understanding, that is only to be improved by study, care, application, and the use of such means and helps, as are necessary to make a man a proficient in any art or science.

Classicus is a man of learning, and well versed in all the best authors of antiquity. He has read them so much, that he has entered into their spirit, and can very ingeniously imitate the manner of any of them. All their thoughts are his thoughts, and he can express himfelf in their language. He is fo great a friend to this improvement of the mind, that if he lights of a young fcholar he never fails to advise him concerning his ftudies.

Classicus tells his young man, he must not think that he has done enough, when he has only learnt languages; but that he must be daily conversant with the best authors read them again and again, catch their spirit by living with them, and that there is no other way of becoming like them, or of making himfelf a man of talte and judge-

How wife might Clafficus have been, and how much good might he have done, in the world, if he had but thought as justly of devotion, as he does of learning?

He never, indeed, fays any thing shocking or offensive about devotion, because he never thinks or talks about it. It fuffers nothing from him, but neglect and difregard.

The two testaments would not have had so much as a place amongst his books, but that they are both to be had in Greek.

Classicus thinks that he sussiciently shews his regard for the holy feripture, when he tells you, that he has no other book of piety besides them.

It is very well, Clafficus, that you prefer the bible to all other books of piety; he has no judgment, that is not

thus far of your opinion.

But if you will have no other book of piety befides the bible, because it is the best, How comes it, Classicus, that you do not content yourself with one of the best books amongst the Greeks and Romans? How comes it that you are so greedy and eager after all of them? How comes it that you think the knowledge of one is a necessary help to the knowledge of the other? How comes it that you are so earnest, so laborious, so expensive of time and your money to restore broken periods and scraps of the ancients?

How comes it that you read fo many commentators upon Cicero, Horace, and Homer, and not one upon the gospel? How comes it that your love of Cicero, and Ovid, makes you love to read an author that writes like them; and yet your esteem for the gospel gives you no desire, may prevents your reading such books, as breathe the very spirit of the gospel?

How comes it that you tell your young feholar, he must not content himself with barely understanding his authors, but must be continually reading them all, as the only means of entering into their spirit, and forming his own judgment according to them?

Why then must the bible lie alone in your study? Is not the spirit of the saints, the piety of the holy followers of Jesus Christ, as good and necessary a means of entering into the spirit and taste of the gospel, as the reading of the ancients is of entering into the spirit of antiquity?

Is the fpirit of poetry only to be got by much reading of poets and orators? And is not the fpirit of devotion to be got in the fame way, by frequent reading the holy thoughts, and pious strains of devout men?

Is your young poet to fearch after every line, that may give new wings to his fancy, or direct his imagination? And is it not as reasonable for him, who defires to improve in the divine life, that is, in the love of heavenly things, to fearch after every strain of devotion, that may move, kindle, and inflame the holy ardour of his foul.

Do you advise your orator to translate the best orations, to commit much of them to memory, to be frequently exercising his talent in this manner, that habits of thinking and speaking justly may be formed in his mind? And is there not the same benefit and advantage to be made by books of devotion? Should not a man use them in the same way, that habits of devotion, and afpiring to God in holy thoughts, may be well formed in his soul.

Now the reason why Classicus does not think and judge thus reasonably of devotion, is owing to his never thinking of it in any other manner, than as the repeating a form of words. It never in his life entered into his head, to think of devotion as a state of the heart, as an improveable talent of the mind, as a temper that is to grow and increase like our reason and judgment, and to be formed in us by such a regular diligent use of proper means, as are necessary to form any other wise habit of mind.

And it is for want of this, that he has been content all his life with the bare letter of prayer, and eagerly bent upon entering into the spirit of heathen poets and crators.

And it is much to be lamented, that numbers of fcholars are more or lefs chargeable with this excellive folly; fo negligent of improving their devotion, and so defirous of other poor accomplishments, as if they thought it a nobler talent, to be able to write an epigram in the turn of Martial, than to live, and think, and pray to God, in the spirit of St Austin.

And yet to correct this temper, and fill a man with a quite contrary spirit, there seems to be no more required, than the bare belief of the truth of Christianity.

And if you was to ask Mundanus and Classicus, or any man of business or learning, whether piety is not the highest perfection of man, or devotion the greatest attainment in the world, they must both be forced to answer in the assirmative, or eise give up the truth of the gospel.

For to fet any accomplishment against devotion, or to

think any thing, or all things in the world, bears any proportion to its excellency; is the same absurdity in a Christian, as it would be in a philosopher to prefer a meal's meat, to the greatest improvement in knowledge.

For as philosophy professes purely the fearch and enquiry after knowledge; fo Christianity supposes, intends, defires and aims at nothing elfe, but the raifing fallen man to a divine life, to fuch habits of holiness, fuch degrees of devotion, as may fit him to enter amongst the holy inhabitants of the kingdom of heaven.

He that does not believe this of Christianity, may be reckoned an infidel; and he that believes thus much, has faith enough to give him a right judgment of the value of things, to support him in a found mind, and enable him to conquer all the temptations which the world shall lay in his way.

To conclude this chapter. Devotion is nothing elfe but right apprehensions, and right affections towards

God.

All practices therefore that heighten and improve our true apprehensions of God, all ways of life that tend to nourish, raife, and fix our affections upon him, are to be reckoned fo many helps and means to fill us with devotion.

As prayer is the proper fuel of this holy flame, fo we must use all our care and contrivance to give prayer its full power; as by alms, felf-denial, frequent retirements, and holy readings, composing forms for ourselves, or using the best we can get, adding length of time, and obferving hours of prayer; changing, improving, and fuiting our devotions to the condition of our lives, and the flate of our hearts.

Those who have most leifure, feem more especially called to a more eminent observance of these holy rules of a devout life. And they, who by the necessity of their state, and not through their own choice, have but little time to employ thus, must make the best use of that little they have.

For this is the certain way of making devotion prcduce a devout life.

CHAP, XV.

Of chanting or finging of pfalms in our private devotions.

Of the excellency and benefit of this kind of devotion. Of the great effects it hath upon our hearts. Of the means of performing it in the best manner.

YOU have feen in the foregoing chapter what means and methods you are to use, to raise and improve your devotion. How early you are to begin your prayers, and what is to be the subject of your first devotions in the morning.

There is one thing still remaining, that you must be required to observe, not only as sit and proper to be done, but as such as cannot be neglected, without great prejudice to your devotions. And that is, to begin all your prayers with a pfalm.

This is fo right, is fo beneficial to devotion, has fo much effect upon our hearts, that it may be infifted upon as a common rule for all perfons.

I do not mean that you should read over a psalm, but that you should chant or sing one of those psalms, which we commonly call the reading psalms. For singing is as much the proper use of a psalm, as devout supplication is the proper use of a form of prayer. And a psalm only read, is very much like a prayer that is only looked over.

Now the method of chanting a pfalm, fuch as is used in the colleges, in the universities, and in some churches, is such as all persons are capable of. The change of the voice in thus chanting of a pfalm is so small and natural, that every body is able to do it, and yet sufficient to raise and keep up the gladness of our hearts.

You are therefore to confider this chanting of a pfalm, as a necessary beginning of your devotions, as something that is to awaken all that is good and holy within you, that is to call your spirits to their proper duty, to set you in your best posture towards heaven, and tune all the powers of your soul to worship and adoration.

For

For there is nothing that so clears a way for your prayers, nothing that so disperses dulness of heart, nothing that so purities the soul from poor and little passions, nothing that so opens heaven, or carries your heart fo near it, as these songs of praise.

They create a fense and delight in God, they awaken holy desires, they teach you how to ask, and they prevail with God to give. They kindle an holy flame, they turn your heart into an altar, your prayers into incense, and carry them as a sweet smelling savour to the throne of Grace.

The difference between finging and reading a pflam, will eafily be understood, if you consider the difference between reading and finging a common song that you like. Whilst you only read it, you only like it, and that is all; but soon as you sing it, then you enjoy it, you feel the delight of it, it has got hold of you, your passions keep pace with it, and you feel the same spirit within you, that there seems to be in the words.

If you was to tell a person that has such a song, that he need not sing it, that it was sufficient to peruse it; he would wonder what you mean; and would think you as absurd, as if you was to tell him, that he should only look at his food, to see whether it was good, but need not eat it; For a song of praise not sung, is very like any other good thing not made use of.

You will perhaps fay, that finging is a particular talent, that belongs only to particular people, and that you have neither voice nor car to make any mufick.

If you had faid that finging is a general talent, and that people differ in that as they do in all other things, you had faid fornething much truer.

For how vaitly do people differ in the talent of thinking, which is not only common to all men, but feems to be the very effence of human nature! How readily do fome people reason upon every thing: and how hardly do others reason upon any thing! How clearly do some people discourse upon the most abstruse matters? and how confusedly do others talk upon the plainest subjects!

Yet no one defires to be excused from thought, or reafon, or discourse, because he has not these talents as fome people have them. But it is full as just, for a perfon to think himself excused from thinking upon God, from reasoning about his duty to him, or discoursing about the means of salvation, because he has not these talents in any fine degree; this is full as just, as for a person to think himself excused from singing the praises of God, because he has not a fine ear, or a musical voice.

For as it is fpeaking, and not graceful fpeaking, that is a required part of prayer; as it is bowing, and not genteel bowing, that is a proper part of adoration; fo it is finging, and not artful fine finging, that is a required way of praising God.

If a person was to sorbear praying, because he had an odd tone in his voice; he would have as good an excuse as he has, that forbears from singing psalms, because he has but little management of his voice. And as a man's speaking his prayers, though in an odd tone, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of his own devotion; so a man's singing of a psalm, though not in a very musical way, may yet sufficiently answer all the ends of rejoicing in, and praising God.

Secondly, This objection might be of fome weight, if you was defired to fing, to entertain other people; but is not to be admitted in the prefent case; where you are only required to fing the praises of God, as a part of your own private devotion.

If a person that has a very ill voice, and a bad way of speaking, was desired to be the mouth of a congregation, it would be a very proper excuse for him, to say that he had not a voice, or a way of speaking, that was proper for prayer. But he would be very absurd, if for the same reason he should neglect his own private devotions.

Now this is exactly the case of singing psalms; you may not have the talent of singing, so as to be able to entertain other people, and therefore it is reasonable to excuse yourself from it; but if for that reason you should excuse yourself from this way of praising God, you would be guilty of a great absurdity: because singing is no more required for the music that is made by it, than prayer is required for the sine words that it contains, but as it is the natural and proper expression of a heart rejoicing in God.

Our bleffed Saviour and his apostles sung an hymn, but it may reasonably be supposed, that they rather rejoiced in God, than made fine music.

Do but so live, that your heart may truly rejoice in God, that it may seel itself affected with the praises of God, and then you will find, that this state of your heart will neither want a voice, nor ear, to find a tune for a psalm. Every one at some time or other, finds himself able to sing in some degree; there are sometimes and occasions of joy, that make all people ready to express their sense of it in some fort of harmony. The joy that they seel, forces them to let their voices have a part in it.

He therefore, that faith he wants a voice, or an ear, to fing a pfalm, mistakes the case: he wants that spirit that really rejoices in God; the dulness is in his heart, and not in his ear; and when his heart seels a true joy in God, when it has a full relish of what is expressed in the pfalms, he will find it very pleasant, to make the motions of his voice express the motions of his heart.

Singing indeed, as it is improved into an art, as it fignifies the running of the voice through fuch or fuch a compass of notes, and keeping time with a studied variety of changes, is not natural, nor the effect of any natural state of the mind; so in this sense, it is not common to all people, any more than those antick and invented motions, which make sine dancing, are common to all people.

But finging, as it fignifies a motion of the voice fuitable to the motions of the heart, and the changing of its tone according to the meaning of the words which we utter, is as natural and common to all men, as it is to speak high when they threaten in anger, or to speak low when they are dejected and ask for a pardon.

All men therefore are fingers, in the fame manner as all men think, speak, laugh, and lament. For finging is no more an invention, than grief or joy are inventions.

Every state of the heart naturally puts the body into some state that is suitable to it, and is proper to shew it to other people. If a man is angry, or diffdainful, no one need inftruct him how to express these passions by the tone of his voice. The state of his heart disposes him to a proper use of his voice.

If there are but few fingers of divine fongs, if people want to be exhorted to this part of devotion; it is because there are but few, whose hearts are raised to that height of piety, as to feel any motions of joy and delight in the praises of God.

Imagine to yourself, that you had been with Moses when he was led through the Red Sea; that you had seen the waters divide themselves, and stand on an heap on both sides; that you had seen them held up till you had passed through, then let fall upon your enemies; do you think that you should then have wanted a voice or an ear to have sung with Moses, The Lord is my strength and my song, and he is become my subvation, &c.? I know, your own heart tells you, that all people must have been singers upon such an occasion. Let this therefore teach you that it is the heart that tunes a voice to sing the praises of God; and that if you cannot sing these same words now with joy, it is because you are not so affected with the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ, as the Jews were, or you yourself would have been, with their deliverance at the Red sea.

That it is the state of the heart that disposes us to rejoice in any particular kind of singing, may be easily proved from variety of observations upon human nature. An old debauchee may, according to the language of the world, have neither voice nor ear, if you only sing a psalm, or a song, in praise of virtue to him; but yet if in some easty tune you sing something that celebrates his former debauchees, he will then, though he has no teeth in his head, shew you, that he has both a voice and an ear to join in such music. You then awaken his heart and he as naturally sings to such words, as he laughs when he is pleased. And this will be the case in every song that touches the heart; if you celebrate the ruling passion of any man's heart, you put his voice in tune to join with you.

Thus if you can find a man, whose ruling temper is devotion, whose heart is full of God, his voice will rejoice in those songs of praise, which glorify that God that is the joy of his heart, though he has neither voice nor ear for other music. Would you therefore delightfully perform this part of devotion, it is not so necessary to learn a tune, or practice upon notes, as to prepare your heart; for, as our blessed Lord saith, out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, &c. so it is equally true, that out of the heart proceed holy joys, thankfgiving and praise. If you can once say with David, My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed; it will be very easy and natural to add, as he did, I will sing, and give praise, &c.

Secondly, Let us now confider another reason for this kind of devotion. As singing is a natural effect of joy in the heart, so it has also a natural power of rendering the heart joyful.

The foul and body are so united, that they have each of them power over one another in their actions. Certain thoughts and sentiments in the soul, produce such and such motions or actions in the body; and on the other hand, certain motions and actions of the body, have the same power of raising such and such thoughts and sentiments in the soul. So that as singing is the natural effect of joy in the mind, so it is as truly a natural cause of raising joy in the mind.

As devotion of the heart naturally breaks out into outward acts of prayer, fo outward acts of prayer are natural means of raising the devotion of the heart.

It is thus in all frates and tempers of the mind; as the inward frate of the mind produces outward actions fuitable to it, so those outward actions have the like power of raising an inward state of mind suitable to them.

As anger produces angry words, fo angry words increase anger.

So that if we barely confider human nature, we shall find, that singing or chanting the Pfalms, is as proper and necessary to raise our hearts to a delight in God, as prayer is proper and necessary to excite in us the spirit of devotion. Every reason for one, is in all respects as strong a reason for the other.

If therefore you would know the reason and necessity of singing Psalms, you must consider the reason and ne-

ceffity of praifing and rejoicing in God; because singing of Pfalms is as much the true exercise and support of this fpirit of thankfgiving, as prayer is the true exercise and support of the spirit of devotion. And you may as well think, that you can be devout as you ought, without the use of prayer, as that you can rejoice in God as you ought, without the practice of finging pfalms. Because this singing is as much the natural language of praife and thankfgiving, as prayer is the natural language of devotion.

The union of foul and body is not a mixture of their fubstances, as we see bodies united and mixed together but confifts folely in the mutual power that they have of acting upon one another.

If two persons were in such a state of dependance upon one another, that neither of them could act, or move, or think, or feel, or fuffer, or defire any thing, without putting the other into the fame condition, one might properly say, that they were in a strict union, although their fubstances were not united together.

Now this is the union of the foul and body; the fub. stance of the one cannot be mixed or united with the other; but they are held together in fuch a state of union, that all the actions and fufferings of the one, are at the fame time the actions and fufferings of the other. The foul has no thought or passion, but the body is concerned in it; the body has no action or motion, but what in fome degree effects the foul.

Now as it is the fole will of God, that is the reason and cause of all the powers and effects which you see in the world; as the fun gives light and heat, not because it has any natural power of fo doing; as it is fixed in a certain place, and other bodies move about it: not because it is in the nature of the sun to stand still, and in the nature of other bodies to move about it; but merely because it is the will of God, that they should be in such a state. As the eye is the organ or instrument of seeing, not because the skins, and coats, and humours of the eye, have a natural power of giving fight: As the ears are the organs or instrument of hearing, not because the make of the ear has any natural power over founds, but merely because it is the will of God, that feeing and hearing should be thus received: So in like manner it is the fole will of God, and not the nature of a human foul or body, that is the cause of this union betwixt the foul and the body.

Now if you rightly apprehend this fhort account of the union of the foul and body, you will fee a great deal into the reason and necessity of all the outward

This union of our fouls and bodies, is the reason both why we have so little and so much power over ourselves. It is owing to this union that we have so little power over our souls; for as we cannot prevent the effects of external objects upon our bodies; as we cannot command outward causes; so we cannot always command the inward state of our minds; because, as outward objects act upon our bodies without our leave, so our bodies act upon our minds by the laws of the union of the soul and the body: And thus you see it is owing to this union, that we have so little power over ourselves.

On the other hand, it is owing to this union, that we have fo much power over ourfelves. For as our fouls in a great meafure depend upon our bodies; and as we have great power over our bodies; as we command our outward actions, and oblige ourselves to such habits of life, as naturally produce habits in the foul; as we can mortify our bodies, and remove ourselves from objects that inflame our passions; so we have a great power over the inward state of our fouls. Again, as we are masters of our outward actions; as we can force ourselves to outward acts of reading, praying, finging, and the like; and as all these bodily actions have an effect upon the foul, as they naturally tend to form fuch and fuch tempers in our hearts; fo by being masters of these outward, bodily actions, we have great power over the inward Itate of the heart.

And thus it is owing to this union, that we have fo much power over ourselves.

Now from this you may also see the necessity and benefit of singing Psalms, and of all the outward acts of religion; for if the body has so much power over the soul, it is certain that all such bodily actions as affect the soul, are of great weight in religion. Not as if there was any true worship or piety in the actions themselves, but because they are proper to raise and support that fpirit, which is the true worship o' God.

Though therefore the feat of letigion is in the heart, yet fince our bodies have a power over our hearts, fince outward actions both proceed from, and enter into the heart, it is plain, that outward actions have a great power over that religion which is feated in the heart.

We are therefore as well to use outward holps, as inward meditation, in order to beget and fix habes of piety in our hearts.

This doctrine may be easily carried too far; for by calling in too many outward means of worship, it may degenerate into superstition: as on the other hand, some have fallen into the contrary extreme. For because religion is justly placed in the heart, some have pursued that notion so far, as to renounce vocal prayer, and other outward acts of worship, and have resolved all religion into a quietism, or mystic intercourses with God in silence.

Now thefe are two extremes equally prejudicial to true religion; and ought not to be objected either against internal or external worship. As you ought not to say, that I encourage that quietism, by placing religion in the heart; so neither ought you to say that I encourage superstition, by shewing the benefit of outward acts of worship.

For fince we are neither all foul, nor all body; feeing none of our actions are either feparately of the foul, or feparately of the body; feeing we have no habits but fuch as are produced by the actions both of our fouls and bodies; it is certain, that if we would arrive at habits of devotion, or delight in God, we must not only meditate and exercise our fouls, but we must practife and exercise our bodies to all foch outward actions, as are conformable to these inward tempers.

If we would truly profitate our foul's before God, we must use our bodies to postures of translation. It we defire true servour of devotion, we must make prayer the frequent labour of our sips. If we would banish all pride and passion from our hearts, we must force our-felves to all outward actions of patience and meekness.

Ιf

If we would feel motions of joy and delight in God, we must practise all the outward acts of it, and make our voices call upon our hearts.

Now therefore, you may plainly fee the reason and necessity of singing of Psalms; it is because outward actions are necessary to support inward tempers; and therefore the outward act of joy is necessary to raise and support the inward joy of the mind.

If any people were to leave off prayer, because they seldom find the motions of their hearts answering the words which they speak, you would charge them with great absurdity. You would think it very reasonable, that they shall continue their prayers, and be strict in observing all times of prayer, as the most likely means of removing the dulness and indevotion of their hearts.

Now this is very much the case as to singing of psalms, people often sing without finding any inward joy suitable to the words which they speak; therefore they are careless of it, or wholly neglect it; not considering that they act as absurdly, as he that should neglect prayer, because his heart was not enough affected with it. For t is certain, that this singing is as much the natural means of raising motions of joy in the mind, as prayer is the natural means of raising devotion.

I have been the longer upon this head, because of its great importance to true religion. For there is no state of mind so holy, so excellent, and so truly perfect, as that of thankfulness to God; and consequently nothing is of more importance in religion, than that which exercifes and improves this habit of mind.

A dull, uneafy, complaining spirit, which is sometimes the spirit of those that seem careful of religion, is yet of all tempers the most contrary to religion, for it disowns that God which it pretends to adore. For he sufficiently disowns God, who does not adore him as a Being of infinite goodnefs.

If a man does not believe that all the world is as God's family, where nothing happens by chance, but all is guided and directed by the care and providence of a being that is all love and goodness to all his creatures; if a man do not believe this from his heart, he cannot be said truly to believe in God. And yet he that has this faith, faith, hath faith enough to overcome the world, and always be thankful to God. For he that believes that every thing happens to him for the best, cannot possibly complain for the want of something that is better.

If therefore you live in murmurings and complaints, accusing all the accidents of life, it is not because you are a weak, infirm creature, but it is because you want the first principle of religion, a right belief in God. For as thankfulness is an express acknowledgment of the goodness of God, towards you, so repinings and complaints are as plain accusations of God's want of goodness towards you.

On the other hand, would you know who is the greatest faint in the world? It is not he who prays most, or fasts most; it is not he who gives most alms, or is most eminent for temperance, chastity, or justice; but it is he who is always thankful to God, who wills every thing that God willeth, who receives every thing as an instance of God's goodness, and has a heart always ready to praise God for it.

All prayer and devotion, fastings and repentance, meditation and retirement, all facraments and ordinances, are but so many means to render the soul thus divine and conformable to the will of God, and to fill it with thankfulness and praise for every thing that comes from God. This is the perfection of all virtues; and all virtues that do not tend to it, or proceed from it, are but so many false ornaments of a soul not converted unto God.

You need not therefore now wonder, that I lay fo much stress upon singing a psalm at all your devotions, since you see it is to form your spirit to such joy and thankfulness to God, as is the highest perfection of a divine and holy life.

If any one would tell you the shortest, surest way to all happiness, and all perfection, he must tell you to make it a rule to yourfelf, to thank and praise God for every thing that happens to you. For it is certain, that whatever seeming calamity happens to you, if you thank and praise God for it, you turn it into a blessing. Could you therefore work miracles, you could not do more for yourself, than by this thankful spirit, for it heals with a word (peaking, and turns all that it touches into happine :

It corefuse you would be fortrue to your eternal interest, as to propose this chankfulness as the end of all your religions, if you would but fettle it in your mind, the chis was the state that you was to aim at by all your devotions; you would then have something plain and visible to walk by in all your actions, you would then easily see the effect of your virtues, and might tafely such as of your improvement in piety. For so far as you resonate all felish tempers and motions of your county la, and teck for no other happiness, but in the thanks a reception of every thing that happens to you, so far you may be fafely reckoned to have advanced in piety.

And although this be the highest temper that you can aim at, though it be the noblest facrifice that the greatest taint can offer unto God, yet it is not tied to any time, or place, or great occasion, but is always in your power, and may be the exercise of every day. For the common events of every day are sufficient to discover and exercise this temper, and may plainly shew you how far you are governed in all your actions by this thankful Ipirit.

And for this reason I exhort you to this method in your devotion, that every day may be made a day of thanksgiving, and that the spirit of murmur and discontent may be unable to enter into the heart, which is so often employed in finging the praifes of God.

It may perhaps after all be objected, that although the great benefit, and excellent effects of this practice, are very apparent, yet it feems not altogether in fit for private devotions; tince it can hardly be performed without making our devotions public to other people, and feems also liable to the charge of founding a trumpet at our prayers.

It is therefore answered, First, That great numbers of people have it in their power to be as private as they please; such persons therefore are excluded from this excuse, which however it may be so to others, is none to them. Therefore let such take the benefit of this excellent devotion.

Secondly, Numbers of people are by the necessity of their state, as servants, apprentices, prisoners, and families in small houses, forced to be continually in the prefence or fight of fomebody or other.

Now are fuch persons to neglect their prayers, because they cannot pray without being seen? Are they not rather obliged to be more exact in them, that others may not be witnesses of their neglect, and so corrupted by their example?

Now what is here faid of devotion, may furely be faid of this chanting a pfalm, which is only a part of devotion.

The rule is this; Don't pray that you may be feen of men, but if your confinement obliges you to be always in the fight of others, be more afraid of being feen to neglect, than of being feen to have recourse to prayer.

Thirdly, The ftate of the matter is this. Either people can use such privacy in this practice, as to have no hearers, or they cannot. If they can, then this objection vanishes as to them: and if they cannot, they should consider their confinement, and the necessities of their state, as the confinement of a prison; and then they have an excellent pattern to follow, they may imitate St. Paul and Silas, who sang praises to God in prison, though we are expressly told, that the prisoners heard them. They therefore did not refrain from this kind of devotion for sear of being heard by others. If therefore any one is in the same necessity, either in prison or out of prison, what can he do better, than to follow this example?

I cannot pass by this place of scripture, without defiring the pious reader to observe how strongly we are here called upon to this use of psalms, and what a mighty recommendation of it, the practise of these two great faints is.

In this their great diffres in prison, in chains, under the foreness of stripes, in the horror of night, the divinest, holiest thing they could do, was to sing praises unto God.

And fhall we, after this, need any exhortation to this holy practice? Shall we let the day pass without such thankfgivings as they would not neglect in the night? Shall a prison, chains and darkness, furnish them with fongs of praise, and shall we have no singings in our closets?

Further, let it also be observed, that while these two holy men were thus employed in the most exalted part of devotion, doing that on earth, which angels do in heaven, that the foundations of the prison were shaken, all the doors were opened, and every one's hands were loosed. Acts xvi. 26.

And shall we now ask for motives to this divine exercise, when, instead of arguments, we have here such miracles to convince us of this mighty power with

God?

Could God by a voice from heaven more expressly call us to these songs of praise, than by thus shewing us, how he hears, delivers, and rewards those that use them?

But this by the way. I now return to the objection in hand; and answer, Fourthly, That the privacy of our prayers, is not destroyed by our having, but by our feeking witnesses of them.

If therefore nobody hears you but those you cannot feparate yourfelf from, you are as much in secret, and your Father who feeth in secret, will as truly reward your fecrecy, as if you was feen by him alone.

Fifthly, Private prayer, as it is opposed to prayer in public, does not suppose that no one is to have any witness of it. For husbands and wives, brothers and fisters, parents, and children, masters and fervants, tutors and pupils, are to be witnesses to one another of such devotion, as may truly and properly be called private. It is far from being a duty to conceal such devotion from such near relations.

In all these cases therefore, where such relations fometimes pray together in private and sometimes apart by themselves, the chanting of a Psalm can have nothing objected against it.

Our bleffed Lord, commands us when we fast, to anoint our heads and wash our faces, that we appear not unto men to fast, but unto our Father which is in secret.

But

But this only means, that we must not make public oftentation to the world of our faiting.

For if no one was to fast in private, or could be said to fast in private, but he that had no witnesses of it, no one could keep a private fast, but he that lived by himfelf: For every family must know who fasts in it. Therefore the privacy of fasting does not suppose such a privacy, as excludes every body from knowing it, but such a privacy as does not seek to be known abroad.

Cornelius the devout centurion, of whom the fcripture faith, that he gave much, and prayed to God alavay, faith unto St Peter, Four days ago, I was fasting until this hour, Acts x. 2.

Now that this fasting was sufficiently private and acceptable to God, appears from the vision of an angel, with which the holy man was bleffed at that time.

But that it was not fo private, as to be entirely unknown to others, appears, as from the relation of it here, fo from what is faid in another place, that he called two of his houshold servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited upon him continually. So that Cornelius his fasting was so far from being unknown to his family, that the foldiers and they of his houshold were made devout themselves, by continually waiting upon him, that is, by seeing and partaking of his good works.

As therefore the privacy or excellency of fasting is not destroyed by being known to some particular persons, neither would the privacy or excellency of your devotions be hurt, though by chanting a psalm you should be heard by some of your family.

The whole of the matter is this. Great part of the world can be as private as they please, therefore let them use this excellent devotion between God and themselves.

Another great part of the world must and ought to have witnesses of several of their devotions; let them therefore not neglect the use of a Pfalm at such times as it ought to be known to those with whom they live, that they do not neglect their prayers. For surely, there can be no harm in being known to be singing a Pfalm, at fuch times as it ought to be known that you are at your prayers.

And if at other times you defire to be in fuch fecrecy at your devotions, as to have nobody suspect it, and for that reason sorbear your Psalm; I have nothing to object against it; provided, that at the known hours of prayer, you never omit this practice.

For who would not be often doing that in the day, which St Paul and Silas would not neglect in the middle of the night? And if, when you are thus finging, it should come into your head, how the prison shaked, and the doors opened, when St Paul sang, it would do your devotion no harm.

Lastiy, Seeing our imaginations have great power over our hearts, and can mightily affect us with their representations, it would be of great use to you, if at the beginning of your devotions, you was to imagine to yourself some such representations, as might heat and warm your heart into a temper suitable to those prayers that you are then about to offer unto God.

As thus; before you begin your Pfalm of praise and rejoicing in God, make this use of your imagination.

Be still, and imagine to yourself, that you saw the heavens open, and the glorious choirs of Cherubims and Scraphims about the throne of God. Imagine that you hear the music of those angelic voices that cease not day and night to sing the glories of him that is, and was, and is to come.

Lelp your imaginations with fuch paffages of fcripture as these. Rev. vii. 9. "I beheld, and lo, in heaven a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, standing before the throne, and before the Lamb, cloathed with white robes, and palms in their hands. And they cried with a loud voice, Salvation to our God which stiteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

And all the angels flood round about the throne, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and power, and strength, be unto God, for ever and ever. Amen."

Think upon this, till your imagination has carried you above the clouds, till it has placed you amongst those heavenly beings, and made you long to bear a part in their eternal music.

If you will but use yourfelf to this method, and let your imagination dwell among such representations as these, you will soon find it an excellent means of raising the spirit of devotion within you.

Always therefore begin your Pfalm or fong of praife, with these imaginations; and at every verse of it, imagine yourself amongst those heavenly companions, that your voice is added to theirs, and that angels join with you, and you with them; and that you with a poor and low voice, are singing that on earth, which they are singing in heaven.

Again, Sometimes imagine that you had been one of those that joined with our bleffed Saviour when he sung an hynn. Strive to imagine to yoursels, with what majesty he looked; fancy that you had stood close by him, surrounded with his glory. Think how your heart would have been inflamed, what ecstacies of joy you would have then felt, when singing with the Son of God. Think again and again, with what joy and devotion you would then have sung, had this been really your happy state, and what a punishment you should have thought it, to have been then silent; and let this teach you how to be affected with Psalms and Hymns of thanks-giving.

Again, Sometimes imagine to yourfelf, that you faw holy David with his hands upon his harp, and his eyes fixed upon heaven, calling with transport on the Creation, fun and moon, light and darkness; day and night, men and angels, to join with his rapturous foul in praifing the Lord of heaven.

Dwell upon this imagination, till you think you are finging with this divine mufician, and let fuch a companion teach you to exalt your heart unto God in the following Pfalm; which you may use constantly first in the morning.

Pfalm cxlv. I will magnify thee, O God my king: I will praise thy name for ever and ever, &c.

These following Pfalms, as the 34th, 96th, 103d, 111th, 146th, 147th, are such as wonderfully set forth the giory of God: and therefore you may keep to any one of them at any particular hour, as you like: Or you may take the finest parts of any Pfalms, and so adding them together, may make them fitter for your own devotion.

CHAP. XVI.

Recommending devotion at nine o'clock in the morning, called in scripture, the third hour of the day. The subject of these prayers, is humility.

AM now come to another hour of prayer, which in Scripture is called the third hour of the day; but according to our way of numbering the hours, it is called the ninth hour of the morning.

The devout Christian must at this time look upon himself as called upon by God to renew his acts of prayer, and address himself again to the throne of grace.

There is indeed no express command in Scripture to repeat our devotions at this hour. But then it is to be considered also, that neither is there an express command to begin and end the day with prayer. So that if that be looked upon as a reason for neglecting devotion at this hour, it may as well be urged as a reason for neglecting devotion both at the begining and end of the day.

But if the practice of the faints in all ages of the world, if the customs of the pious Jews and primitive Christians be of any force with us, we have authority enough to perfuade us, to make this hour a constant feafon of devotion.

The fcriptures shew us how this hour was consecrated to devotion, both by Jews and Christians: so that if we defire to number ourselves amongst those whose hearts were devoted unto God, we must not let this hour pass, without presenting us to him in some solemnities of devotion. And besides this authority for this practice, the reasonableness of it is sufficient to invite us to the observance of it.

For

For if you was up at a good time in the morning, your first devotions will have been at a proper distance from this hour: you will have been long enough at other business, to make it proper for you to return to this greatest of all business, the raising your soul and affections unto God.

But if you have rifen fo late, as to be hardly able to begin your first devotions at this hour, which is proper for your second, you may thence learn that the indulging yourself in the morning sleep is no small matter; since it sets you so far back in your devotions, and robs you of those graces and blessings, which are obtained by frequent prayers.

For if prayer has power with God, if it loofes the bands of fin, if it purities the foul, reforms our hearts, and draws down the aids of divine grace; how can that be reckoned a finall matter, which robs us of an hour of prayer?

Imagine yourfelf fomewhere placed in the air, as a spectator of all that passes in the world; and that you saw in one view, the devotions which all Christian people offer unto God every day. Imagine that you saw some piously dividing the day and night, as the primitive christians did, and constant at all hours of devotion, singing psalms, and calling upon God, at all those times, that saints and martyrs received their gifts and graces from God.

Imagine that you faw others living without any rules, as to times and frequency of prayer, and only at their devotions fooner or later, as fleep and laziness happens to permit them.

Now if you was to fee this, as God fees it, how do you suppose you should be affected with this sight? What judgment do you imagine you should pass upon these different forts of people? Could you think, that those who were thus exact in their rules of devotion, got nothing by their exactness? Could you think, that their prayers were received just in the same manner, and procured them no more biessings, than theirs do, who prefer laziness and indulgence to times and rules of devotion?

Could you take the one to be as true fervants of God,

God, as the other? Could you imagine, that those who were thus different in their lives, would find no difference in their states after death? Could you think it a matter of indifferency, to which of these people you were most like?

If not, let it be now your care to join yourself to that number of devout people, to that fociety of faints, amongst whom you defire to be found, when you leave the world.

And although the bare number and repitition of our prayers is of little value, yet fince prayer rightly and attentively performed, is the most natural means of amending and purifying our hearts; since importunity and frequency in prayer is as much pressed upon us by scripture, as prayer itself, we may be sure, that when we are frequent and importunate in our prayers, we are taking the best means of obtaining the highest benefits of a devout life.

And on the other hand, they who through negligence, lazinefs, or any other indulgence, render themselves either unable, or uninclined to observe rules and hours of devotion, we may be sure, that they deprive themselves of those graces and blessings which an exact and fervent devotion procures from God.

Now as this frequency of prayer is founded in the doctrines of scripture, and recommended to us by the practice of the true worshippers of God; so we ought not to think ourselves excused from it, but where we can shew, that we are spending our time in such business, as is more acceptable to God, than these returns of prayer.

Least of all must we imagine, that dulness, negligence, indulgence, or diversions, can be any pardonable excuses for our not observing an exact and frequent method of devotion.

If you are of a devout spirit, you will rejoice at these returns of prayer, which keep your soul in an holy enjoyment of God; which change your passions into divine love, and fill your heart with stronger joys and consolations, than you can possibly meet with in any thing else.

And if you are not of a devout spirit, then you are moreover obliged to this frequency of prayer, to train and exercife your heart into a true fense and feeling of devotion.

Now feeing the holy fpirit of the Christian Religion, and the example of the faints of all ages, calls upon you thus to divide the day into hours of prayer; fo it will be highly beneficial to you, to make a right choice of those matters which are to be the subject of your prayers, and to keep every hour of prayer appropriated to some particular subject, which you may alter or enlarge, according as the state you are in requires.

By this means, you will have an opportunity of being large and particular in all the parts of any virtue or grace, which you then make the subject of your prayers. And by asking for it in all its parts, and making it the substance of a whole prayer once every day, you will foon find a mighty change in your heart; and that you cannot thus constantly pray for all the parts of any virtue every day of your life, and yet live the rest of the day contrary to it.

If a worldiy-minded man was to pray every day against all the instances of a worldly temper; if he should make a large description of the temptations of covetousness, and desire God to assist him to reject them all, and to disappoint him in all his covetous designs, he would find his conscience so much awakened, that he would be forced elther to forsake such prayers, or to forfake a worldly life.

The fame will hold true, in any other inftance. And if we afk, and have not, it is becaufe we afk amifs. Because we afk in cold and general forms, such as only name the virtues without describing their particular parts, such as are not enough particular to our condition, and therefore make no change in our hearts. Whereas when a man enumerates all the parts of any virtue in his prayers, his conscience is thereby awakened, and he is frightened at seeing how far short he is of it. And this thirs him up to an ardour in devotion, when he fees how much he wants of that virtue which he is praying for.

I have in the last chapter laid before you the excellency of praise and thanksgiving, and recommended that as the subject of your first devotions in the morning.

And

And because an humble state of soul is the very state of Religion, because humility is the life and soul of piety, the foundation and support of every virtue and good work, the best guard and security of all holy affections; I shall recommend humility to you, as highly proper to be made the constant subject of your devotions, at this third hour of the day; earnessly desiring you to think no day safe, or likely to end well, in which you have not thus early put yourself in this posture of humility, and called upon God to carry you through the day in the exercise of a meek and lowly spirit.

This virtue is fo effential to the right flate of our foul's, that there is no pretending to a reasonable or pious life without it. We may as well think to fee without eyes, or live without breath, as to live in the spirit of religion, without the fpirit of humility.

And although it is thus the foul and effence of all religious duties, yet is it, generally speaking, the least understood, the least regarded, the least intended, the least defired, and fought after, of all other virtues, amongst all forts of Christians.

No people have more occasion to be afraid of the approaches of pride, than those who have made some advances in a pious life. For pride can grow as well upon our virtues as our vices, and steals upon us on all occasions.

Every good thought that we have, every good action that we do, lays us open to pride, and exposes us to the affaults of vanity and felf-fatisfaction.

It is not only the beauty of our persons, the gifts of fortune, or our natural talents, and the distinctions of life; but even our devotions and alms, our fastings and humiliations, expose us to fresh and strong temptations of this evil spirit.

And it is for this reason, that I so earnestly advise every devout person to begin every day in this exercise of humility, that he may go on in safety under the protection of his good guide, and not fall a sacrifice to his own progress in those virtues, which are to save mankind from destruction.

Humility does not confift in having a worfe opinion of curfelves than we deferve, or in abasing ourselves

lower than we really are. But as all virtue is founded in truth, fo humility is founded in a true and just sense of our weakness, misery, and sin. He that rightly feels and lives in this sense of his condition, lives in humility.

The weakness of our state appears from our inability to do any thing, as of ourselves. In our natural state we are entirely without any power; we are indeed active beings, but can only act by a power, that is every moment lent us from God.

We have no more power of our own to move a hand, or ftir a foot, than to move the fun, or ftop the clouds.

When we fpeak a word, we feel no more power in ourfelves to do it, than we feel ourfelves able to raife the dead. For we act no more within our own power, or by our own ftrength, when we fpeak a word, or make a found, than the apostles acted within their own power, or by their own strength, when a word from their mouth cast out devils, and cured diseases.

As it was folely the power of God that enabled them to fpeak to fuch purposes, so it is folely the power of God that enables us to fpeak at all.

We indeed find that we can speak, as we find that we are alive; but the actual exercise of speaking is no more in our own power, than the actual enjoyment of life.

This is the dependent helpless poverty of our state; which is a great reason for humility. For since we neither are, nor can do any thing of ourselves, to be proud of any thing that we are, or of any thing that we can do, and to ascribe glory to ourselves for these things, as our own ornaments, has the guilt both of stealing and lying. It has the guilt of stealing as it gives to ourselves those things which only belong to God. It has the guilt of lying as it is the denying the truth of our state, and pretending to be something that we are not.

Secondly, Another argument for humility, is founded in the mifery of our condition.

Now the mifery of our condition appears in this, that we use the borrowed powers of our nature, to the torment and vexation of ourselves, and our fellow-creatures.

God Almighty has entrusted us with the use of reason, and we use it to the disorder and corruption of our nature. We reason ourselves into all kinds of folly and misery, and make our lives the sport of foolish and extravagant passons: Seeing after imaginary happiness in all kinds of shapes, creating to ourselves a thousand wants, amusing our heats with false hopes and sears, using the world worse than irrational animals, envying, vexing and tormenting one another with restless passons, and unreasonable contentions.

Let any man but look b ck upon his own life, and fee what use he has made of his reason, how little he has confulted it, and how lefs he has followed it. foolish passions, what vain thoughts, what needless labours, what extravegent projects, have taken up the greatest part of his life. How foolish he has been in his words and converfation; how feldom he has done well with judgment, and how often he has been kept from doing ill by accident; how feldom he has been able to please himself, and how often he has displeased others; how often he has changed his counfels, hated what he leved, and leved what he hated; how often he has been enraged and transported at trifles, pleased and displeased with the very same things, and constantly changing from one vanity to another. Let a man but take this view of his own life, and he will fee reason enough to confess, that pride was not made for man.

Let him but confider that if the world knew all that of him, which he knows of himfelf; if they faw what vanity and paffions govern his infide, and what fecret tempers fully and corrupt his best actions, he would have no more pretence to be honoured and admired for his goodness and wisdom, than a rotten and distempered body to be loved and admired for its beauty and comeli-

This is fo true, and fo known to the hearts of almost all people, that nothing would appear more dreadful to them, then to have their hearts thus fully discovered to the eyes of all beholders.

And perhaps there are very few people in the world, who would not rather chuse to die, than to have all their feeret scilies, the errors of their judgments, the vanity of their minds, the salfeness of their pretences, the frequency of their vain and disorderly passions, their uneasi-

nefs,

nefs, hatreds, envies, and vexations, made known unto the world.

And shall pride be entertained in a heart thus conscious of its own miserable behaviour?

Shall a creature in fuch a condition, that he could not fupport himself under the shame of being known to the world in his real state; shall such a creature, because his shame is only known to God, to holy angels, and his own conscience; shall he, in the sight of God and holy angels, dare to be vain and proud of himself?

Thirdly, If to this we add the shame and guilt of Sn.

we shall find a still greater reason for humility.

No creature that had lived in innocence, would have thereby got any pretence for felf-honour and efteem; because as a creature, all that it is, or has, or does, is from God, and therefore the honour of all that belongs to it, is only due to God.

But if a creature that is a finner, and under the displeafure of the great governor of all the world, and deferving nothing from him, but pains and punishments for the shameful abuse of his powers; if such a creature pretends to felf-glory for any thing that he is, or does, he can only be said to glory in his shame.

Now how monstrous and shameful the nature of sin is, is sufficiently apparent from that great atonement that is necessary to cleante us from the guilt of it.

Nothing less has been required to take away the guilt of our fins, than the sufferings and death of the Son of God. Had he not taken our nature upon him, our nature had been for ever separated from God, and incapable of ever appearing before him.

And is there any room for pride or felf-glory, whilft

we are partakers of fuch a nature as this?

Have our fins rendered us fo abominable and odious to him that made us, that he could not fo much as receive our prayers, or admit our repentance, till the Son of God made himself man, and became a suffering advocate for our whole race; and can we in this state pretend to high thoughts of ourselves? Shall we presume to take delight in our own worth, who are not worthy so much as to ask pardon for our fins, without the mediation and intercession of the Son of God?

Thus

Thus deep is the foundation of humility laid, in these deplorable circumstances of our condition; which shew, that it is as great an offence against truth, and the reason of things, for a man in this state of things to lay claim to any degrees of glory, as to pretend to the honour of creating himself. If man will boast of any thing as his own, he must boast of his misery and sin; for there is nothing else but this, that is his own property.

Turn your eyes towards heaven, and fancy that you faw what is doing there; that you faw cherubims and feraphims, and all the glorious inhabitants of that place, all united in one work; not feeking glory from one another, not labouring their ewn advancement, not contemplating their own perfections, not finging their own praifes, not valuing themselves, and despising others, but all employed in one and the same work; all happy in one and the same joy; casting down their crowns before the throne of God, giving glory, and honour, and power to him alone, Rev. iv. 10, 11.

Then turn your eyes to the fallen world, and confider how unreafonable and odious it must be, for such poor worms, such miserable sinners, to take delight in their own fancied glories, whilst the highest and most glorious sons of heaven, seek for no other greatness and honour, but that of ascribing all honour and greatness, and glory to God alone?

Pride is only the diforder of the fallen world, it has no place amongst other beings; it can only subsist where ignorance and sensuality, lies and falshood, lusts and impurity reign.

Let a man, when he is most delighted with his own figure, look upon a crucifix, and contemplate our bleffed Lord stretched out, and nailed upon a cross; and then let him consider, how absurd it must be, for a heart full of pride and vanity, to pray to God, through the sufferings of such a meek and crucified Saviour?

These are the reslections that you are often to meditate upon, that you may thereby be disposed to walk before God and man in such a spirit of humility, as becomes the weak, miserable, finful state of all that are descended from fallen Adam.

When you have by fuch general reflections as thefe,

convinced your mind of the reasonableness of humility, you must not content yourself with this, as if you was therefore humble, because your mind acknowledges the reasonableness of humility, and declares against pride. But you must immediately enter yourself into the practice of this virtue, like a young beginner, that has all of it to learn, that can learn but little at a time, and with great difficulty. You must consider, that you have not only this virtue to learn, but that you must be content to proceed as a learner in it all your time, endeavouring after greater degrees of it, and practising every day acts of humility, as you every day practice acts of devotion.

You would not imagine yourfelf to be devout, because in your judgment you approved of prayers, and often declared your mind in favour of devotion. Yet how many people imagine themselves humble enough for no other reason, but because they often commend humility,

Cæcus is a rich man, of good birth, and very fine parts, He is fond of dress, curious in the smallest matters that can add any ornament to his person. He is haughty and imperious to all his inferiors, is very sull of every thing that he says or does, and never imagines it possible for such a judgment as his to be mistaken. He can bear no contradiction, and discovers the weakness of your understanding, as soon as ever you oppose him. He changes every thing in his house, his habit, and his equipage, as often as any thing more elegant comes in his way, Cæcus would have been very religious, but that he always thought he wasso.

There is nothing so odious to Cæcus as a proud man; and the misfortune is, that in this he is so very quick-fighted, that he discovers in almost every body, some ftrokes of vanity.

On the other hand, he is exceeding fond of humble and modest persons. Humility, says he, is so amiable a quality, that it forces our esteem wherever we meet with it. There is no possibility of despising the meanest person that has it, or of esteeming the greatest man that wants it.

Cæcus no more suspects himself to be proud, than he suspects fuspects his want of sense. And the reason of it is, because he always finds himself in love with humility, and fo enraged at pride.

It is very true, Caecus, you speak sincerely when you say you love humility, and abhor pride. You are no hypocrite, you speak the true sentiments of your mind; but then take this along with you, Cæcus, that you only love humility, and hate pride, in other people. You never once in your life thought of any other humility, or of any other pride, than that which you have seen in other people.

The case of Cæcus is a common case; many people live in all the instances of pride, and indulge every vanity that can enter into their minds, and yet never suffect themselves to be governed by pride and vanity, because they know how much they dislike proud people, and how mightily they are pleased with humility and modefty, wherever they find them.

All their specches in favour of humility, and all their railings against pride, are looked upon as so many true exercises, and effects of their own humble spirit.

Whereas in truth, these are so far from being proper acts, or proofs of humility, that they are great arguments of the want of it.

For the fuller of pride any one is himfelf, the more impatient will be at the smallest instances of it in other people. And the less humility any one has in his own mind, the more will be demand, and be delighted with it in other people.

You must therefore act by a quite contrary measure, and reckon yourself only so far humble, as you impose every instance of humility upon yourself, and never call for it in other people. So far an enemy to pride, as you never spare it in yourself, nor even censure it in other persons.

Now in order to do this, you need only confider, that pride and humility fignify nothing to you, but fo far as they are your own; that they do you neither good nor harm, but as they are the tempers of your own heart.

The loving therefore of humility is of no benefit or advantage to you, but fo far as you love to fee all your own thoughts, words and actions governed by it. And the hating of pride does you no good, is no perfection in you, but so far as you hate to harbour any degree of it in your own heart.

Now in order to begin, and fet out well in the practice of humility, you must take it for granted, that you are proud, that you have all your life been more or less infected with this unreasonable temper.

You should believe also, that it is your greatest weakness, that your heart is most subject to it, that it is so constantly stealing upon you, that you have reason to watch and suspect its approaches in all your actions.

For this is what most people, especially new beginners in a pious life, may with great truth think of them-

For there is no one vice that is more deeply rooted in our nature, or that receives fuch conftant nouriflment from almost every thing that we think or do. There being hardly any thing in the world that we want or use, or any action or duty of life, but pride finds some means or other to take hold of it. So that at what time soever we begin to offer ourselves to God, we can hardly be furer of any thing, than that we have a great deal of pride to repent of.

If therefore you find it difagreeable to your mind to entertain this epinion of yourfelf, and that you cannot put yourfelf amongst those that want to be cured of pride, you may be as sure, as if an angel from heaven had told you, that you have not only much, but all your humility to feek.

For you can have no greater fign of a more confirmed pride, than when you think that you are humble enough. He that thinks he loves God enough, shews himself to be an entire stranger to that holy passion; so he that thinks he has humility enough, shews that he is not so much as a beginner in the practice of true humility.

CHAP. XVII.

Showing how difficult the practice of humility is made, by the general failt and temper of the world. How Chriftianity requireth us to live contrary to the world.

VERY person, when he first applies himself to the exercise of this virtue of humility, muit, as I said before, consider himself as a learner, that is, to learn something that is contrary to former tempers, and habits of mind, and which can only be got by daily and constant practice.

He has not only as much to do, as he that has some new art or science to learn; but he has also a great deal to unlearn: He is to forget, and lay aside his own spirit, which has been a long while fixing and forming itself; he must forget, and depart from abundance of passions and opinions, which the fashion, and vogue, and spirit of the world has made natural to him.

He must lay aside his own spirit; because, as we are born in sin, so in pride, which is as natural to us as self love, and continually springs from it. As this is one reason why Christianity is so often represented as a new birth, and a new spirit.

He must lay aside the opinions and passions which he has received from the world, because the vogue and sashion of the world, by which we have been carried away, as in a torrent, before we could pass right judgments of the value of things, is in many respects contrary to humility; so that we must unlearn what the spirit of the world has taught us, before we can be governed by the spirit of humility.

The devil is called in Scripture the prince of this world, because he has great power in it, because many of its rules and principles are invented by this evil spirit, the father of all lies and falshood, to separate us from

God, and prevent our return to happiness.

Now

Now according to the spirit and vogue of this world, whose corrupt air we have all breathed, there are many things that pass for great, and honourable, and most defirable, which yet are so far from being so, that the true greatness and honour of our nature consists in the not defiring them. To abound in wealth, to have fine houses and rich clothes, to be attended with fplendour and equipage, to be beautiful in our persons, to have titles of dignity, to be above our fellow creatures, to command the bows and obeifance of other people, to be looked on with admiration, to overcome our enemies with power, to subdue all that oppose us, to set ourselves in as much splendour as we can, to live highly and magnificently, to eat and drink, and delight ourselves in the most costly manner, thefe are the great, the honourable, the defireable things, to which the spirit of the world turns the eyes of all people. And many a man is afraid of standing still, and not engaging in the purfuit of these things, lest the same world should take him for a fool.

The history of the gospel, is chiefly the history of Christ's conquest over this spirit of the world. And the number of true Christians, is only the number of those who following the Spirit of Christ, have lived contrary to this spirit of the world.

If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. Again, Whosever is born of God, overcometh the world. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth; for ye are dead, and your life is kid with Christ in God. This is the language of the New Testament. This is the mark of Christianity; you are to be dead, that is, dead to the spirit and temper of the world, and live a new life in the spirit of Jesus Christ.

But notwithstanding the clearness and plainness of these doctrines which thus renounce the world, yet great part of christians live and die slaves to the customs and temper of the world.

How many people fwell with pride and vanity, for fuch things as they would not know how to value at all, but that they are admired in the world?

Would a man take ten years more drudgery in bufiness to add two horses more to his coach, but that he knows, that the world most of all admires a coach and fix? How fearful are many people of having their houses poorly furnished, or themselves meanly cloathed, for this only reason, lest the world should make no account of them, and place them amongst low and mean people?

How often would a man have yielded to the haughtinefs and ill nature of others, and thew a fubmiffive temper, but that he dares not pass for such a poor spirited man in the opinion of the world.

Many a man would often drop a refentment, and forgive an affront, but that he is afraid, if he should, the world would not forgive him.

world would not lorgive inin

How many would practife Christian temperance and sobriety in its utmost perfection, were it not for the censure which the world passes upon such a life?

Others have frequent intentions of living up to the rules of Christian perfection, which they are frightened from, by considering what the world would say of them.

Thus do the impressions which we have received from living in the world enslave our minds, that we dare not attempt to be eminent in the fight of God, and holy angels, for fear of being little in the eyes of the world.

From this quarter arises the great difficulty of humility, because it cannot subsist in any mind, but so far as it is dead to the world, and has parted with all defires of enjoying all greatness and honours. So that in order to be truly humble, you must unlearn all those notions which you have been all your life learning from this corrupt spirit of the world.

You can make no stand against the assaults of pride, the meek assections of humility can have no place in your soul, till you stop the power of the world over you, and refolve against a blind obedience to its laws.

And when you are once advanced thus far, as to be able to ftand ftill in the torrent of worldly fashions and opinions, and examine the worth and value of things which are most admired and valued in the world, you have gone a great way in the gaining of your freedom,

and

and have laid a good foundation for the amendment of your heart.

For as great as the power of the world is, it is all built upon a blind obedience, and we need only open our eyes, to get quit of its power. Ask who you will, learned or unlearned, every one feems to know and confess, that the general temper and spirit of the world, is nohing elfe but humour, folly and extravagance.

Who will not own, that the wisdom of philosophy, the piety of religion, was always confined to a fmall number? And is not this expretsly owning and confessing, that the common spirit and temper of the world, is neither according to the wifdom of philosophy, nor the piety of religion.

The world therefore feems enough condemned even by itfelf, to make it very easy for a thinking man to be of the same judgment.

And therefore I hope you will not think it a hard faying, that in order to be humble, you must withdraw your obedience from that vulgar spirit which gives laws to fops and coquets, and form your judgments according to the wifdom of philosophy, and the piety of religion. Who would be afraid of making fuch a change as this?

Again, To lesion your fear and regard to the opinion of the world, think how foon the world will difregard you, and have no more thought or concern about you, than about the poorest animal that died in a ditch.

Your friends, if they can, may bury you with fome distinction, and set up a monument to let posterity see that your dust lies under such a stone; and when that is done, all is done. Your place is filled up by another, the world is just in the same state it was, you are blotted out of its fight, and as much forgotten by the world as if you had never belonged to it.

Think upon the rich, the great, and the learned perfons, that have made great figures, and been high in the esteem of the world; many of them died in your time, and yet they are funk and loft, and gone, and as much difregarded by the world, as if they had been only to many bubbles of water.

Think again, how many poor fouls fee heaven loft, and lie lie now expecting a miferable eternity, for their fervice and homage to a world, that thinks itfelf every whit as well without them, and is just as merry as it was when they were in it?

Is it therefore worth your while to lofe the smallest degree of virtue, for the sake of pleasing so bad a master, and so false a friend as the world is?

Is it worth your while to bow the knee to fuch an idol as this, that so foon will have neither eyes, nor ears, nor a heart to regard you; instead of ferving that great, and holy, and mighty God, that will make all his fervants partakers of his own eternity?

Will you let the fear of a falfe world, that has no love for you, keep you from the fear of that God, who has only created you, that he may love and blefs you to all eternity?

Lastly, you must consider what behaviour the profession of Christianity requireth of you, with regard to the world:

Now this is plainly delivered in these words; Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, Gal. i. 4. Christianity therefore implieth a deliverance from this world; and he that professeth to live contrary to every thing, and every temper, that is peculiar to this evil world.

St John declareth this opposition to the world in this manner, They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. We are of God, 1 John iv. 5. This is the description of the followers of Chrift; and it is proof enough that no people are to be reckoned christians in reality, who in their hearts and tempers belong to this world. We know, faith the fame Apostle, That we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, c. v. v. 19. Christians therefore can no farther know that they are of God, than fo far as they know that they are not of the world; that is, that they do not live according to the ways and spirit of the world. For all the ways, and maxims, and politics, and tempers of the world, lie in wickedness. And he is only of God, or born of God in Christ Jesus, who has overcome this world, that is, who has chose to live by faith, and govern his actions by the principles of a wisdom revealed from God by Christ Jesus.

St Paul takes it for a certainty fo well known to christians, that they are no longer to be confidered as living in this world, that he thus argues from it, as from an undeniable principle, concerning the abolithing the rites of the Jewish law: Wheref re if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye for jest to or linances? Col. ii. 20. Here could be no argument in this, but in the apostles taking it for undeniable, that Christians knew, that their profession required them to have done with all the tempers and pathons of this world, to live as citizens of the new Jerusalem, and to have their conversation in heaven.

Our bleffed Lord himself has fully determined this point in these words: They are not of this world, as I am not of this world. This is the state of Christianity with regard to this world. If you are not thus out of, and contrary to the world, you want the distinguishing mark of christianity; you do not belong to Christ, but by being out of the world as he was out of it.

We may deceive ourfelves, if we pleafe, with vain and foftning commands upon these words, but they are and will be understood in their first simplicity and plainness, by every one that reads them in the same spirit that our blessed Lord spoke them. And to understand them in any lower, less significant meaning, is to let carnal wisdom explain away that doctrine, by which itself was to be destroyed.

The Christians great conquest over the world, is all contained in the mystery of Christ upon the cross. It was there, and from thence, that he taught all christians how they were to come out of, and conquer the world, and what they were to do in order to be his disciples. And all the doctrines, facraments, and institutions of the gospel, are only so many explications of the meaning, and applications of the benefit of this great mystery.

And the state of Christianity implieth nothing else but an entire, absolute conformity to that spirit which Christ shewed in the mysterious sacrifice of himself upon the cross.

Every man therefore, is only so far a Christian as he partakes of this spirit of Christ. It was this that made St Paul so passionately express himself, God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ: but why does he glory? Is it because Christ had suffered in his stead, and had excused him from suffering? No, by no means. But it was because his Christian profession had called him to the henour of suffering with Christ, and of dying to the world under reproach and contempt, as he had done upon the cross. For he immediately adds, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. Gal. vi. 14. This you see was the reason of his glorying in the cross of Christ, because he had called him to a like state of death and crucifixion to the world.

Thus was the crofs of Christ, in St Paul's days, the glory of christians; not as it fignified their not being athamed to own a Master that was crucified, but as it fignified their glorying in a religion, which was nothing else but a doctrine of the crofs, that called them to the same suffering spirit, the same facrifice of themselves, the same renunciation of the world, the same humility and meckness, the same patient bearing of injuries, reproaches, and contempts, and the same dying to all the greatness, honours and happiness of the world, which Christ shewed upon the crofs.

To have a true idea of Christianity, we must not consider our blessed Lord as suffering in our stead, but as our representative, acting in our name, and with such particular merit, as to make our joining with him acceptable unto God.

He suffered, and was a facrifice, to make our sufferings and facrifice of ourselves sit to be received by God. And we are to suffer, to be crucified, to die, and rise with Christ; or else his crucifixion; death and resurrection will profit us nothing.

The necessity of this conformity to all that Christ did, and suffered upon our account, is very plain from the whole tenor of Scripture.

First, As to his sufferings, this is the only condition of our being faved by them, if "we fuffer with him, we shall also reign with him."

Secondly, As to his crucifixion. "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him," &c. Rom. vi. 6. Here you fee Christ is not crucified in our stead; but unless our old man be really crucified with him, the cross of Christ will profit us nothing.

Thirdly, As to the death of Christ, the condition is this; "If we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." If therefore Christ be dead alone, if we are not dead with him, we are as sure, from this scripture, that we shall not live with him.

Lastly, As to the refurrection of Christ, the scripture sheweth us how we are to partake of the benefit of it: "If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God," Col. iii, 1.

Thus you fee how plainly the Scripture fets forth our bleffed Lord, as our reprefentative, acting and fuffering in our name, binding and obliging us to conform to all that he did and fuffered for us.

It was for this reason, that the holy Jesus said of his disciples, and in them of all true believers, "They are not of this world, as I am not of this world." Because all true believers conforming to the sufferings, crucifixion, death, and resurrection of Christ, live no longer after the spirit and temper of this world, but their life is hid with Christ in God.

This is the state of separation from the world, to which all orders of Christians are called. They must so far renounce all worldly tempers, be so far governed by the things of another life, as to shew, that they are truly and really crucified, dead, and risen with Christ. And it is as necessary for all Christians to conform to this great change of spirit, to be thus in Christ new creatures, as it was necessary that Christ should suffer, die, and rise again for our falvation.

How high the Christian life is placed above the ways of this world, is wonderfully described by St Paul in these words: "Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the slesh; yea though we have known Christ after the slesh; yet henceforth we know him no more. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." 2 Cor. v. 16.

He that feels the force and spirit of these words, can hardly bear any human interpretation of them. Henceforth, says he; that is, since the death and resurrection of Christ, the state of Christianity is become so glorious a state, that we do not even consider Christ himself as in the slesh upon earth, but as a God of glory in heaven; we know and consider ourselves not as men in the slesh, but as sellow-members of a new society, that are to have all our hearts, our tempers, and conversation in heaven.

Thus it is that christianity has placed us out of, and above the world; and we fall from our calling, as soon us we fall into the tempers of the world.

Now as it was the fpirit of the world that nailed our bleffed Lord to the crofs; fo every man that has the spirit of Christ, that opposes the world, as he did, will certainly be crucified by the world some way or other.

For Christianity still lives in the same world that Christ did; and these two will be utter enemies, till the kingdom of darknefs is entirely at an end.

Had you lived withour Saviour as his true disciple, you had then been hated as he was; and if you now live in his spirit, the world will be the same enemy to you now, that it was to him then,

"If ye were of the world," faith our bleffed Lord, "the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you," John xv. 19.

We are apt to lose the true meaning of these words, by considering them only as an historical description of something that was the state of our Saviour and his disciples at that time. But this is reading the Scripture as a dead letter: for they as exactly describe the state of true Christians at this, and all other times to the end of the world.

For as true Christianity is nothing else but the spirit of Christ, so whether that spirit appear in the person of Christ himself, or his apostles, or followers in any age, it is the same thing; whoever hath his spirit will be hated, despised, and condemned by the world as he was.

For the world will always love its own, and none but its own: this is as certain and unchangeable, as the contrariety betwixt light and darknefs.

When the holy Jesus saith, If the world hate you, (he does not add by way of consolation, that it may some time or other cease its hatred, or that it will not always hate them; but he only gives this as a reason for their bearing it, You know that it hated me before it hated you: signifying, that it was he, that is, his spirit, that by reason of its contrariety to the world, was then, and always would be hated by it.

You will perhaps fay, that the world is now become Christian, at least that part of it where we live; and therefore the world is not to be considered in that state of opposition to Christianity, as when it was heathen.

It is granted, the world now professeth Christianity. but will any one say, that this Christian world is of the spirit of Christ? Are its general tempers the tempers of Christ? Are the passions of sensuality, self-love, pride, covetousness, ambition, and vain glory, less contrary to the spirit of the gospel, now they are amongst Christians, than when they were amongst heathens? Or will you say, that the tempers and passions of the heathen world are lost and gone?

Consider, Secondly, What you are to mean by the world. Now this is fully described to our hands by St John. All that is in the world, the lust of the steeps, and the pride of life, &c. 1 John iii. 16. This is an exact and full description of the world. Now will you say, that this world is become Christian? But if all this still subsists, then the same world is now in being, and the same enemy to Christianity, that was in St. John's days.

It was this world that St John condemned, as being not of the Father; whether therefore it outwardly professeth, or openly persecuteth Christianity, it is still in the same state of contrariety to the true spirit and holiness of the gospel.

And indeed the world by professing Christianity, is so K 6

far from being a less dangerous enemy than it was before, that it has by its favours destroyed more Christians than ever it did by the most violent perfecution.

We must therefore be so far from considering the world as in a state of less enmity and opposition to Christianity, than it was in the first times of the gospel, that we must guard against it as a greater and more dangerous enemy now, than it was in those times.

It is a greater enemy, because it has greater power over Christians by its favours, riches, honours, rewards, and protections, than it had by the fire and fury of its persecutions.

It is a more dangerous enemy, by having lost its appearance of enmity. Its outward profession of Christianity makes it no longer considered as an enemy, and therefore the generality of people are easily persuaded to resign themselves up to be governed and directed by it.

How many confciences are kept as quiet, upon no other foundation, but because they fin under the authority of the Christian world?

How many directions of the gospel lie by unregarded; and how unconcernedly do particular persons read them; for no other reason, but because they seem unregarded by the Christian world?

How many compliances do people make to the Chriftian world, without any hefitation, or remorfe; which, if they had been required of them only by heathens, would have been refused, as contrary to the holiness of Christianity?

Who could be content with feeing how contrary his life is to the gospel, but because he sees that he lives as the Christian world doth?

Who that reads the gospel, would want to be perfuaded of the necessity of great felf-denial, humility, and poverty of spirit, but that the authority of the world has banished this doctrine of the cross?

There is nothing therefore, that a good christian ought to be more suspicious of, or more constantly guard against, than the authority of the Christian world.

And all the paffages of Scripture, which represent the world as contrary to Christianity, which require our fe-

paration from it, as from a mammon of unrighteousness, a monster of iniquity, are all to be taken in the same strict sense, in relation to the present world.

For the change that the world has undergone, has only altered its methods, but not lessened its power of destroying religion.

Christians had nothing to fear from the heathen world, but the loss of their lives; but the world become a friend, makes it difficult for them to fave their religion.

Whilst pride, fensuality, covetousness, and ambition, had only the authority of the heathen world, Christians were thereby made more intent upon the contrary virtues. But when pride, sensuality, covetousness, and ambition, have the authority of the Christian world, then private Christians are in the utmost danger, not only of being shamed out of the practice, bu of losing the very notion of the piety of the gospel.

There is therefore hardly any possibility of faving yourself from the present world, but by considering it as the same wicked enemy to all true holiness, as it is represented in the scriptures; and by assuring yourself, that it is as dangerous to conform to its tempers and pass-fions, now it is Christian, as when it was heathen.

For only ask yourself, Is the piety, the humility, the sobriety of the Christian world, the piety, the humility and sobriety of the Christian spirit? If not, how can you be more undone by any world, than by conforming to that which is Christian?

Need a man do more to make his foul unfit for the mercy of God, than by being greedy and ambitious of honour? Yet how can a man renounce this temper, without renouncing the spirit and temper of the world, in which you now live?

How can a man be made more incapable of the spirit of Christ, than by a wrong value for money; and yet how can he be more wrong in his value of it, than by following the authority of the Christian world?

Nay, in every order and station of life, whether of learning or business, either in Church or state, you cannot act up to the spirit of religion without renouncing the most general temper and behaviour of those, who are of the same order and business as yourself.

And

And though human prudence feems to talk mighty wifely about the necessity of avoiding particularities, yet he that dares not to be fo weak as to be particular, will be often obliged to avoid the most substantial duties of Christian piety.

There reflections will, I hope, help you to break through those difficulties, and resist those temptations, which the authority and fashion of the world hath raised against the practice of Christian humility.

CHAP. XVIII.

Sheaving how the education which men generally receive in their youth, makes the doctrines of humility difficult to be practifed. The spirit of a better education, reprefented in the character of Paternus.

NOTHER difficulty in the practice of humility, arifes from our education. We are all of us, for the most part, corruptly educated, and then committed to take our course in a corrupt world; so that it is no wonder, if examples of great piety are so seldom seen.

Great part of the world are undone, by being born and bred in families that have no religion; where they are made vicious and irregular, by being like those with whom they first lived.

But this is not the thing I now mean; the education that I here intend, is fuch as children generally receive from virtuous and fober parents, and learned tutors and governors.

Had we continued perfect, as God created the first man, perhaps the perfection of our nature had been a sufficient self-instruction for every one. But as sickness and diseases have created the necessity of medicines and physicians, so the change and disorder of our rational nature has introduced the necessity of education and tutors.

And as the only end of the physician is, to restore nature to its own state; so the only end of education is, to restore our rational nature to its proper state. Education cation therefore is to be confidered as reason borrowed at second hand, which is, as far as it can, to supply the loss of original perfection. And as physic may justly be called the art of restoring health, so education should be considered in no other light, than as the art of recovering to man the use of his reason.

Now as the instruction of every art or science is sounded upon the discoveries, the wisdom, experience, and maxims of the several great men that have laboured in it; so that human wisdom, or right use of our reason, which young people should be called to by their education, is nothing else but the best experience and finest reasonings of men, that have devoted themselves to the study of wisdom, and the improvement of human nature.

All therefore that great faints and dying men, when the fullest of light and conviction, and after the highest improvement of their reason, all that they have said of the necessity of piety, of the excellency of virtue, of their duty to God, of the emptiness of riches, of the vanity of the world; all the sentences, judgments, reasonings, and maxims of the wisest of philosophers, when in their highest state of wisdom, should constitute the common lessons of instruction for youthful minds.

This is the only way to make the young and ignorant part of the world the better for the wisdom and knowledge of the wife and ancient.

An education which is not wholly intent upon this, is as much befide the point, as an art of physic, that had little or no regard to the reftoration of health.

The youths that attended upon Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, and Epictetus, were thus educated. Their every day lessons and instructions were so many lectures upon the nature of man, his true end, and the right use of his faculties; upon the immortality of the soul, its relation to God, the beauty of virtue, and its agreeableness to the divine nature; upon the dignity of reason, the necessity of temperance, fortitude and generosity, and the shame and folly of indulging our passions.

Now as Christianity has, as it were, new created the moral and religious world, and fet every thing that is reasonable, wise, holy and desireable, in its true point of light; fo one would expect, that the education of youth should be as much bettered and amended by Christianity, as the faith and doctrines of religion are amended by it.

As it has introduced fuch a new state of things, and so fully informed us of the nature of man, the ends of his creation, the state of his condition; as it has sixed all our goods and evils, taught us the means of purifying our souls, pleasing God, and becoming eternally happy; one might naturally suppose, that every Christian country abounded with schools for the teaching not only a few questions and answers of a Catechism, but for the forming, training and practising youths in such an outward course of life, as the highest precepts, the strictest rules, and the sublimest doctrines of Christianity require.

An education under Pythagoras, or Socrates, had no other end, but to teach youth to think, judge, act, and follow fuch rules of life, as Pythagoras and Socrates ufed.

And is it not as reasonable to suppose, that a Christian education should have no other end, but to teach youth how to think, and judge, and act, and live according to the strictest laws of Christianity?

At least one would suppose, that in all Christian schools, the teaching youth to begin their lives in the spirit of Christianity, in such severity of behaviour, such abstinence, sobriety, humility and devotion, as Christianity requires, should not only be more, but an hundred times more regarded, than any, or all things else.

For our education should imitate our guardian angels, suggest nothing to our minds but what is wise and holy; help us to discover and subdue every vain passion of our hearts, and every false judgment of our minds.

And it is as fober and reasonable to expect and require all this benefit of a Christian education, as to require that physic should strengthen all that is right in our nature, and remove that which is sickly and diseased.

But alas, our modern education is not of this kind.

The first temper that we try to awaken in children, is pride; as dangerous a passion as that of lust. We stir them up to vain thoughts of themselves, and do every thing thing we can, to puff up their minds with a fense of their own abilities.

Whatever way of life we intend them for, we apply to the fire and vanity of their minds, and exhort them to every thing from corrupt motives: We stir them up to action from principles of strife and ambition, from glory, envy, and a defire of distinction, that they may excel others, and shine in the eyes of the world.

We repeat and inculcate these motives upon them, till they think it a part of their duty to be proud, envious, and vain-glorious of their own accomplishments.

And when we have taught them to fcorn to be outdone by any, to bear no rival, to thirst after every instance of applause, to be content with nothing but the highest distinctions; then we begin to take comfort in them, and promise the world some mighty things from youths of such a glorious spirit.

If children are intended for holy orders, we fet before them fome eminent orator, whose fine preaching has made him the admiration of the age, and carried him through all the dignities and preferments of the church.

We encourage them to have these honours in their eye, and to expect the reward of their studies from them.

If the youth is intended for a trade, we bid him look at all the rich men of the fame trade, and confider how many now are carried about in their flately coaches, who began in the fame low degree as he now does. We awaken his ambition, and endeavour to give his mind a right turn, by often telling him how very rich fuch and fuch a tradefman died.

If he is to be a lawyer, then we fet great counfellors, lords, judges, chancellors, before his eyes. We tell him what great fees, and great applaufe attend fine pleading. We exhort him to take fire at these things, to raise a spirit of emulation in himself, and to be content with nothing less than the highest honours of the long robe.

That this is the nature of our best education, is too plain to need any proof; and I believe there are few parents, but would be glad to see these instructions daily given to their children.

And after all this, we complain of the effects of pride;

we wonder to fee grown men acted and governed by ambition, envy, fcorn, and a defire of glory; not confidering that they were all the time of their youth, called upon to all their action and industry upon the same principles.

You teach a child to fcorn to be out-done, to thirst for distinction and applause; and is it any wonder that he continues to act all his life in the same manner?

Now if a youth is ever to be fo far a Christian as to govern his heart by the doctrines of humility, I would fain know at what time he is to begin it; or if he is ever to begin it at all, why we train him up in tempers quite contrary to it?

How dry and poor must the doctrine of humility found to a youth, that has been spurred up to all his industry by ambition, envy, emulation, and a desire of glory and distinction? And if he is not to act by these principles when he is a man, why do we call him to act by them in his youth?

Envy is acknowledged by all people, to be the most ungenerous, base and wicked passion, that can enter into the heart of man.

And is this a temper to be instilled, nourished and established in the minds of young people?

I know it is faid, that it is not envy, but emulation, that is intended to be awakened in the minds of young men.

But this is vainly faid. For when children are taught to bear no rival, and to fcorn to be out-done by any of their age, they are plainly and directly taught to be envious. For it is impossible for any one to have this fcorn of being out-done, and this contention with rivals, without burning with envy against all those that seem to excel him, or get any distinction from him. So that what children are taught, is rank envy, and only covered with a name of a less odious found.

Secondly, If envy is thus confessedly bad, and it be only emulation that is endeavoured to be awakened in children, furely there ought to be great care taken, that children may know the one from the other. That they may abominate the one as a great crime, whilst they give the other admission into their minds.

But

But if this were to be attempted, the fineness of the distinction betwixt envy and emulation, would shew that it was easier to divide them into words, than to separate them in action.

For emulation, when it is defined in its best manner, is nothing else but a refinement upon envy, or rather the most plausible part of that black and venomous passion.

And though it is eafy to feparate them in the notion, yet the most acute philosopher, that understands the art of distinguishing ever so well, if he gives himself up to emulation, will certainly find himself deep in envy.

For envy is not an original temper, but the natural, necessary, and unavoidable effect of emulation, or a defire of glory.

So that he who establishes the one in the minds of people, necessarily fixes the other there. And there is no other possible way of destroying envy, but by destroying emulation, or a desire of glory. For the one always rises and falls in proportion to the other.

I know it is faid in defence of this method of education, that ambition, and a defire of glory, are necessary to excite young people to industry; and that if we were to press upon them the doctrines of humility, we should deject their minds, and fink them into dulness and idleness.

But these people who say this, do not consider, that this reason, if it has any strength, is full as strong against pressing the doctrines of humility upon grown men, lest we should deject the minds, and sink them into dulness and idleness.

For who does not fee that middle-aged men want as much the affiftance of pride, ambition, and vain-glory, to fpur them up to action and industry, as children do? And it is very certain, that the precepts of humility are more contrary to the designs of such men, and more grievous to their minds, when they are pressed upon them, than they are to the minds of young persons.

This reason therefore that is given, why children should not be trained up in the principles of true humility, is as good a reason why the same humility should never be required of grown men.

Thirdly, Let those people, who think that children would be spoiled, if they were not thus educated, confider this.

Could they think, that if any children had been educated by our bleffed Lord, or his holy Apostles, that their minds would have been funk into dulness and idleness.

Or could they think, that fuch children would not have been trained up in the profoundest principles of a strict and true humility? Can they say that our blessed Lord, who was the meekest and humblest man that ever was on earth, was hindered by his humility from being the greatest example of worthy and glorious actions, that ever were done by man?

Can they fay that his Apostles, who lived in the humble spirit of their Master, did therefore cease to be laborious and active instruments of doing good to all the world?

A few fuch reflections as these, are sufficient to expose all the poor pretences for an education in pride and ambition.

Paternus lived about two hundred years ago; he had but one fon, whom he educated himself in his own house. As they were sitting together in the garden, when the child was ten years old, Paternus thus began to him.

The little time that you have been in the world, my child, you have fpent wholly with me; and my love and tenderne's to you, has made you look upon me as your only friend and benefactor, and the cause of all the comfort and pleasure that you enjoy: your heart, I know, would be ready to break with grief, if you thought this was the last day that I should live with you.

But, my child, though you now think yourfelf mighty happy, because you have hold of my hand, you are now in the hands, and under the care of a much greater Father and Friend than I am, whose love to you is far greater than mine, and from whom you receive such bleflings as no mortal can give.

That God whom you have feen me daily worship; whom I daily call upon to bless both you and me, and all mankind; whose wondrous acts are recorded in those

Scriptures

Scriptures which you constantly read. That God who created the heavens and the earth; who brought a flood upon the whole world; who faved Noah in the ark; who was the God of Abraham, Ifaac, and Jacob, whom Job bleffed and praifed in the greatest afflictions; who delivered the Ifraclites out of the hands of the Egyptians; who was the protector of righteous Joseph, Moles, Joshua and holy Daniel, who fent so many prophets into the world, who fent his Son Jefus Christ to redeem mankind: This God, who has done all thefe great things, who has created fo many millions of men, who lived and died before you was born, with whom the spirits of good men that are departed this life, now live, whom infinite numbers of Angels now worship in heaven; this great God who is the Creator of worlds, of angels, and men, is your loving Father and Friend, your good Creator and Nourisher, from whom, and not from me, you received your being ten years ago, at the time that I planted that little tender Elm which you there

I myfelf am not half the age of this shady Oak, under which we sit; many of our fathers have fat under its boughs, we have all of us called it ours in our turn, though it stands, and drops its masters, as it drops its leaves.

You fee, my fon, this wide and large Firmament over our heads, where the Sun and Moon, and all the Stars appear in their turns. If you was to be carried up to any of these bodies at this vast distance from us, you would still discover others as much above, as the Stars that you see here are above the earth. Were you to go up or down, East or West, North or South, you would find the same height without any top, and the same depth without any bottom.

And yet, my child, fo great is God, that all these bodies added together are but as a grain of sand in his sight. And yet you are as much the care of this great God and Father of all worlds, and all spirits, as if he had no son but you, or there were no creature for him to love and protect but you alone. He numbers the hairs of your head, watches over you sleeping and waking, and has preferved you from a thousand dangers, which neither you nor I know any thing of.

How poor my power is, and how little I am able to do for you, you have often feen. Your late fickness has shewn you how little I could do for you in that state; and the frequent pains of your head are plain proofs, that I have no power to remove them.

I can bring you food and medicines, but have no power to turn them into your relief and nourishment; it is

God alone that can do this for you.

Therefore, my child, fear and worship, and love God. Your eyes indeed cannot yet see him, but every thing you see, are so many marks of his power and presence, and he is nearer to you, than any thing that you can see.

Take him for your Lord and Father, and Friend, look up unto him as the fountain and cause of all the good that you have received through my hands, and reverence me only as the bearer and minister of God's good things unto you. And he that blessed my father before I was born, will bless you when I am dead.

Your youth and little mind is only yet acquainted with my family, and therefore you think there is no happiness out of it.

But my child, you belong to a greater Family than mine, you are a younger member of the Family of this Almighty Father of all nations, who has created infinite orders of angels and numberless generations of men, to be fellow-members of one and the same society in heaven.

You do well to reverence and obey my authority, because God has given me power over you, to bring you up in his fear, and to do for you, as the holy fathers recorded in Scripture did for their children, who are now in rest and peace with God.

I shall in a short time die, and leave you to God, and yourself; and if God forgiveth my sins, I shall go to his Son Jesus Christ, and live amongst Patriarchs and Prophets, Saints and Martyrs, where I shall pray for you, and hope for your safe arrival at the same place.

Therefore, my child, meditate on these great things, and your foul will foon grow great and noble by fo meditating upon them.

Let your thoughts often leave these gardens, these fields and farms, to contemplate upon God and Heaven, to consider upon Angels, and the spirits of good men living in light and glory.

As you have been used to look to me in all your actions, and have been asraid to do any thing, unless you first knew my will; so let it now be a rule of your life, to look up to God in all your actions, to do every thing in his fear, and to abstain from every thing that is not according to his will.

Bear him always in your mind, teach your thoughts to reverence him in every place, for their is no place where he is not.

God keepeth a book of life, wherein all the actions of all men are written; your name is there, my child, and when you die, this book will be laid open before men and angels, and according as your actions are there found, you will either be received to the happiness of those holy men who have died before you, or be turned away amongst wicked spirits, that are never to see God any more.

Never forget this book, my fon, for it is written, it must be opened, you must see it, and you must be tried by it. Strive therefore to fill it with your good deeds, that the hand-writing of God may not appear against you.

God, my child, is all love, and wisdom, and goodness; and every thing that he has made, and every action that he does, is the effect of them all. Therefore you cannot please God, but so far as you strive to walk in love, wisdom and goodness. As all wisdom, love and goodness proceeds from God, so nothing but love, wisdom and goodness can lead to God.

When you love that which God loves, you act with him, you join yourfelf to him; and when you love what he dislikes, then you oppose him, and seperate yourself from him. This is the true and the right way; think what God loves, and do you love it with all your heart.

First of all, my child, worship and adore God, think of him magnificently, fpeak of him reverently, magnify his providence, adore his power, frequent his fervice, and pray unto him frequently and constantly.

Next to this, love your neighbour, which is all mankind, with fuch tenderness and affection, as you love yourself. Think how God loves all mankind, how merciful he is to them, how tender he is of them, how carefully he preserves them, and then strive to love the world as God loves it.

God would have all men to be happy, therefore do you will, and defire the fame. All men are great infrances of divine love, therefore let all men be infrances of your love.

But above all, my son, mark this, never do any thing through strife, or envy, or emulation, or vain-glory. Never do any thing in order to excel other people, but in order to please God, and because it is his will, that you should do every thing in the best manner that you can.

For if it is once a pleafure to you to excel other people, it will by degrees be a pleafure to you, to fee other people not fo good as yourfelf.

Banish therefore every thought of felf-pride, and felf-distinction, and accustom yourself to rejoice in all the excellencies and perfections of your fellow-creatures, and be as glad to see any of their good actions, as your own.

For as God is as well pleafed with their well doings, as with yours; so you ought to defire, that every thing that is wife, and holy, and good, may be performed in as high a manner by other people, as by yourself.

Let this therefore be your only motive and four to all good actions, honest industry, and business, to do every thing in as perfect and excellent a manner as you can, for this only reason, because it is pleasing to God, who desires your perfection, and writes all your actions in a book. When I am dead my son, you will be master of all my estate, which will be a great deal more than the necessities of one family require. Therefore, as you are to be charitable to the souls of men, and wish them the same happiness with you in heaven, so be charitable to their their bodies, and endeavour to make them as happy as you upon earth.

As God has created all things for the common good of all men, fo let that part of them, which is fallen to your share, be employed, as God would have all employed, for the common good of all.

Do good, my fon, first of all to those that most deferve it, but remember to do good to all. The greatest finners receive daily instances of God's goodness towards them, he nourishes and preferves them, that they may repent, and return to him; do you therefore imitate God, and think no one too bad to receive your relief and kindness, when you see that he wants it.

I am teaching you Latin and Greek, not that you should defire to be a great Critic, a fine Poet, or an eloquent Orator; I would not have your heart feel any of those defires, for the defire of these accomplishments is a vanity of the mind, and the mafters of them are generally vain men. For the defire of any thing that is not a real good, lessens the application of the mind after that which is fo.

But I teach you these languages, that at proper times you may look into the hiltory of pail ages, and learn the methods of God's providence over the world. That reading the writings of the ancient Sages, you may fee how wildom and virtue have been the praife of great men of all ages, and fortify your mind by their wife favings.

Let truth and plainnefs therefore be the only ornament of your language, and fludy nothing but how to think of all things as they deferve, to chufe every thing that is best, to live according to reason and order, and to act in every part of your life, in conformity to the will of God. Study how to fill your heart full of the love of God, and the love of your neighbour, and then be content to be no deeper a scholar, no finer a gentleman, than these tempers will make you. As true religion is nothing elfe but simple nature governed by right reason, so it loves and requires great plainness and simplicity of life. Therefore avoid all superfluous shews of finery and equipage, and let your house be plainly furnished with moderate

can afford, but what right reason requires.

Let your dress be sober, clean, and modest, not to set out the beauty of your person, but to declare the sobriety of your mind, that your outward garb may resemble the inward plainness and simplicity of your heart. For it is highly reasonable, that you should be one man, all of a piece, and appear outwardly such as you are inwardly.

As to your meat and drink, in them observe the highest rules of Christian temperance and sobriety; consider your body only as the servant and minister of your soul; and only so nourish it, as it may best perform an humble and obedient fervice to it.

But, my fon, observe this as a most principle thing, which I shall remember you of as long as I live with you.

Hate and despise all human glory, for it is nothing else but human folly. It is the greatest snare and the greatest betrayer that you can possibly admit into your heart.

Love humility in all its instances, practife it in all its parts, for it is the noblest state of the soul of man; it will set your heart and affections right towards God, and fill you with every temper that is tender and affectionate towards men.

Let every day therefore be a day of humility, condefcend to all the weakness and infirmities of your fellow-creatures, cover their frailties, love their excellencies, encourage their virtues, relieve their wants, rejoice in their prosperities, compassionate their distress, receive their friendship, overlook their unkindness, forgive their malice, be a servant of servants, and condescend to do the lowest offices to the lowest of mankind.

Aspire after nothing but your own purity and perfection, and have no ambition but to do every thing in so reasonable and religious a manner, that you may be glad that God is every where present, and sees and observes all your actions. The greatest trial of humility, is an humble behaviour towards your equals in age, estate, and condition of life. Therefore be careful of all the motions of your heart towards these people: Let all your behaviour towards them be governed by unfeigned love. Have no defire to put any of your equals below you, nor any anger at those that would put themselves above you. If they are proud, they are ill of a very bad distemper, let them therefore have your tender pity, and perhaps your meekness may prove an occasion of their cure. But if your humility should do them no good, it will however be the greatest good that you can do to yourself.

Remember that there is but one man in the world, with whom you are to have perpetual contention, and be always striving to exceed him, and that is yourself.

The time of practifing these precepts, my child, will soon be over with you, the world will soon slip through your hands, or rather you will soon slip through it; it seems but the other day since I received these same instructions from my dear father, that I am now leaving with you. And the God that gave me ears to hear, and a heart to receive what my father said unto me, will, I hope, give you grace to love and sollow the same instructions.

Thus did Paternus educate his fon.

Can any one now think that fuch an education as this would weaken and deject the minds of young people, and deprive the world of any worthy and reasonable labours?

It is fo far from that, that there is nothing fo likely to ennoble and exalt the mind, and prepare it for the most heroical exercise of all virtues,

For who will fay, that a love of God, a defire of pleafing him, a love of our neighbour, a love of truth, of reason and virtue, a contemplation of eternity and the rewards of piety, are not stronger motives to great and good actions, than a little uncertain popular praise?

On the other hand, there is nothing in reality that more weakens the mind, and reduces it to meannefs and flavery, nothing that makes it less matter of its own actions, or less capable of following reason, than a love of praise and honour.

For as praise and honour are often given to things and persons, where they are not due; as that is generally most praised and honoured, that most gratifies the hu-humours, fashions, and vicious tempers of the world; so he that acts upon the desire of praise and applause, must part with every other principle; he must say black is white, put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter, and do the meanest, basest things, in order to be applauded.

For in a corrupt world, as this is, worthy actions are only to be supported by their own worth, where, instead of being praised and honoured, they are most often reproached and perfecuted.

So that to educate children upon a motive of emulation, or a defire of glory, in a world where glory itself is false, and most commonly given wrong, is to destroy the natural integrity and fortitude of their minds, and give them a bias which will oftner carry them to base and mean, than great and worthy actions.

CHAP. XIX.

Stewing how the method of educating daughters, makes it difficult for them to enter into the spirit of Christian humility. How miserably they are injured and abused by such an education. The spirit of a better education represented in the character of Eusebia.

THAT turn of mind which is taught and encouraged in the education of daughters, makes it exceeding difficult for them to enter into fuch a fense and practice of humility, as the spirit of Christianity re-

The right education of this fex is of the utmost importance to human life. There is nothing that is more defirable for the common good of all the world. For tho women do not carry on the trade and business of the world, yet as they are mothers, and mistresses of families, that have for some time the care of the education of their children of both ferts, they are entrusted with that which is of the greatest consequence to human life. For this reason, good or bad, women are likely to do as much good or harm in the world, as good or bad men in the greatest business of life.

For as the health, and strength, or weakness, of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the foundness or folly of our minds are not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers.

As we call our first language our mother-tongue, so we may as justly call our first tempers our mother-tempers; and perhaps it may be found more casy to forget the language, than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in the nursery.

It is therefore much to be lamented, that this fex, on whom fo much depends, who have the first forming both of our bodies and our minds, are not only educated in pride, but in the filliest and most contemptible part of it.

They are not indeed fuffered to dispute with us the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elequence, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors; but we turn them over to the study of beauty and dress, and the whole world conspires to make them think of nothing else. Fathers and mothers, friends and relations, seem to have no other wish towards the little girl, but that she may have a fair skin, a fine shape, dress well, and dance to admiration.

Now if our fondness for our persons, a desire of beauty, a love of dress, be a part of pride (as surely it is a most contemptible part of it) the first step towards a woman's humility, seems to require a repentance of her education.

For it must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves, and dressed in such a manner, as is a great reproach to the gravity and sobriety of the Christian life.

And what makes this matter ftill more to be lamented, is this, That women are not only fpoiled by this education, but we fpoil that part of the world, which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety.

For I believe it may be affirmed, that for the most part there is a finer fense, a clearer mind, a readier apprehension, and gentler dispositions in that fex, than in the other.

All which tempers, if they were truly improved by proper studies, and seber methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety than are to be found amongst the generality of men.

For this reason I speak to this matter with so much openness and plainness, because it is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity.

The Church has formerly had eminent faints in that fex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that this honour of their fex is for the most part confined to former

The corruption of the world indulges them in great vanity; and mankind feem to confider them in no other view, than as so many painted idels, that are to allure and gratify their passions; so that if many women are vain, light, gewgaw creatures, they have this to excuse themselves, that they are not only such as their education has made them, but such as the generality of the world allows them to be.

But then they should consider, that the friend to their vanity are no friends of theirs: they should consider, that they are to live for themselves, that they have as great a share in the rational nature as men have; that they have as much reason to pretend, and as much necessity to aspire after the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest amongst Christian Philosophers.

They should consider that they are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wifest amongst mankind.

It is generally faid, that women are naturally of little and vain minds; but this I look upon to be as false and unreasonable, as to fay, that butchers are naturally cruel; for as their cruelty is not owing to their nature, but to their way of life, which has changed their nature; fo whatever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is like the cruelty of butchers, a temper that is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead.

At least thus much must be faid, that we cannot charge any thing upon their nature, till we take care that it is not perverted by their education.

And on the other hand, if it were true, that they were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which feems contrived to ftrengthen and increase this folly and weakness of their minds? For if it were a virtue in a woman to be proud and vain in herfelf, we could hardly take better means to raife this passion in her, that those that are now used in their education.

Matilda is a fine woman, of good breeding, great fense and much religion. She has three daughters that are educated by herself. She will not trust them with any one else, or at any school, for fear they should learn any thing ill. She stays with the dancing master all the time he is with them, because she will hear every thing that is said to them. She has heard them read the scriptures so often, that they can repeat great part of it without book: And there is scarce a good book of devotion, but you may find it in their closers.

Had Matilda lived in the first ages of Christianity, when it was practifed in the fulness and plainness of its doctrines, she had in all probability been one of its greatest faints. But as she was born in corrupt times, where she wants examples of Christian perfection, and hardly ever saw a piety higher than her own; so she has many defects, and communicates them all to her daughters.

Matilda never was meanly dreffed in her life; and nothing pleafes her in drefs, but that which is very rich and beautiful to the eye.

Her daughters fee her great zeal for religion, but then they fee an equal earneitness for all forts of finery. They fee she is not negligent of her devotion, but then they fee her more careful to preferve her complexion, and to prevent those changes, which time and age threaten her with.

They are afraid to meet her, if they have missed the Church; but then they are more afraid to see her, if they are not laced as straight as they can possibly be.

She often shews them her own picture, which was taken when their father fell in love with her. She tells them, how distracted he was with passion at the first sight of her, and that she had never had so fine a complexion, but for the diligence of her good mother, who took exceeding care of it.

Matilda is fo intent upon all the arts of improving their drefs, that she has some new fancy almost every day, and leaves no ornament untried, from the richest jewel to the poorest flower. She is so nice and critical in her judgment, so sensible of the smallest error, that the maid is often forced to drefs and undrefs her daughters three or four times in a day, before she can be satisfied with it.

As to the patching, the referves that to herfelf; for, the fays, if they are not fluck on with judgment, they are rather a prejudice, than an advantage to the face.

The children fee so plainly the temper of their mother, that they even affect to be more pleased with dress, and to be more fond of every little ornament, than they really are, merely to gain her favour.

They faw their eldest fister once brought to her tears, and her perverseness severely reprimanded, for presuming to fay, that she thought it was better to cover the neck, than to go so far naked as the modern dress requires.

She stints them in their meals, and is very scrupulous of what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes the has seen spoiled in her time for want of such care, if a pimple rises in their faces, she is in a great fright, and they themselves are as afraid to see her with it, as if they had committed some great sin.

Whenever they begin to look fanguine and healthful, fhe calls in the affiliance of the doctor; and if physic, or issues, will keep the complexion from inclining to coarse or ruddy, she thinks them well employed.

Вy

By this means they are poor, pale, fickly, infirm creatures, vapoured through want of fpirits, crying at the smallest accidents, swooning away at any thing that frights them, and hardly able to bear the weight of their best cloaths.

The eldest daughter lived as long as she could under this discipline, and died in the twentieth year of her age.

When the body was opened, it appeared that her ribs had grown into her liver, and that her other entrails were much hurt by being crushed together with her stays, which her mother had ordered to be twitched so strait, that it often brought tears into her eyes, whilst the maid was dressing her.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no fuperior.

Matilda fays, fhe should die with grief at this accident, but that her conscience tells her, she has contributed nothing to it herself. She appeals to their closets, to their books of devotion, to testify what care she has taken to establish her children in a life of solid piety and devotion.

Now though I do not intend to fay, that no daughters are brought up in a better way than this, for I hope there are many that are; yet this much I believe may be faid, that the much greater part of them are not brought upfo well, or accustomed to so much religion, as in the prefent instance.

Their minds are turned as much to the care of their beauty and drefs, and the indulgence of vain defires, as in the prefent cafe, without having fuch rules of devotion to stand against it. So that if folid piety, humility, and a fober sense of themselves, is much wanted in that fex, it is the plain and natural consequence of a vain and corrupt education.

And if they are often too ready to receive the first fops, beaux, and fine dancers, for their husbands; it is no wonder they should like that in men, which they have been taught to admire in themselves.

And if they are often feen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, it is no more to be wondered at, than to fee a little flower choaked and killed amongst rank weeds.

For perfonal pride, and affectation, a delight in beauty and fondness of finery, are tempers that must either kill all religion in the foul, or be themselves killed by it; they can no more thrive together, than health and sickness.

Some people that judge hastily, will perhaps here fay, that I am exercifing too great a feverity against the fex.

But more reasonable persons will easily observe, that I entirely spare the sex, and only arraign their education; that I not only spare them, but plead their interest, assert their honour, set forth their persections, commend their natural tempers, and only condemn that education, which is so injurious to their interests, so debases their honour, and deprives them of the benefit of their excellent natures and tempers.

Their education, I profefs, I cannot spare; but the only reason is, because it is their greatest enemy, because it deprives the world of so many blessings, and the Church of so many faints, as might reasonably be expected from persons, so formed by their natural tempers to all goodness and tenderness, and so fitted by the clearness and brightness of their minds, to contemplate, love and admire every thing that is holy, virtuous and divine.

If it should here be faid, that I even charge too high upon their education, and that they are not so much hurt by it, as I imagine.

It may be answered, that though I do not pretend to flate the exact degree of mischief that is done by it, yet its plain and natural tendency to do harm, is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it.

But if any one would know, how generally women are hurt by this education; if he imagines there may be no perfonal pride, or vain fondness of themselves, in those that are patched and dressed out with so much glitter of art and ornament.

Let him only make the following experiment where-ever he pleafes.

Let him only acquaint any fuch woman with his opinion of her; I do not mean that he should tell her to her

her face, or do it in any rude public manner; but let him contrive the most civil, secret, friendly way that he can think of only to let her know his opinion, that he thinks she is neither handsome, nor dresses well nor becomes her finery; and I dare fay, he will find there are but very few fine dressed women, that will like him never the worse for his bare opinion, though known to none but themselves; and that he will not be long without seeing the effects of her resentment.

But if fuch an experiment would flow him that there are but few fuch women that could bear with his friend-flip, after they knew he had fuch an opinion of them, furely it is time to complain of, and accuse that education, which fo generally corrupts their hearts.

For though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their refertment, and uneafiness at any thing, there they pass the judgment upon themselves. If a woman cannot forgive a man who thinks she has no beauty, nor any ornament from her dress, there she insallibly discovers the state of her own heart, and is condemned by her own, and not another's judgment.

For we never are angry at others, but when their opinions of us are contrary to that which we have of ourselves.

A man that makes no pretence to scholarship, is never angry at those that do not take him to be a scholar: So if a women had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those, who are of the same opinion with herself.

So that the general bad effects of this education are too much known, to admit of any reasonable doubt.

But how possible it is to bring up daughters in a more excellent way, let the following character declare.

Eufebia is a pious widow, well born, and well bred, and has a good effate for five daughters, whom she brings up as one intrusted by God, to fit five Virgins for the kingdom of heaven. Her family has the same regulation as a religious house, and all its orders tend to the support of a constant regular devotion.

She, her daughters, and her maids, meet together at all the hours of prayer in the day, and chant Pfalms and other devotions, and fpend the rest of their time in such good works, and innocent diversions, as render them fit to return to their Pfalms and Prayers.

She loves them as her ipiritual children, and they reverence her as their fpiritual mother, with an affection far above that of the fondest friends.

She has divided part of her estate amongst them, that every one may be charitable out of their own stock, and each of them take it in their turns to provide for the poor and sick of the parish.

Eufebia brings them up to all kinds of labour that are proper for women, as fewing, knitting, fpinning, and all other parts of housewifry; not for their amusement, but that they may be serviceable to themselves and others, and be saved from those temptations which attend an idle life.

She tells them, she had rather see them reduced to the necessity of maintaining themselves by their own work, than to have riches to excuse themselves from labour. For though, says she, you may be able to affish the poor without your labour, yet by your labour you will be able to affish them more.

If Eufebia has lived as free from fin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. And if her virtues are stronger and higher than other peoples, it is because they are all founded in a deep humility.

My children, fays she, when your father died, I was much pitied by my friends, as having all the care of a family, and the management of an estate fallen upon me.

But my own grief was founded upon another principle; I was grieved to see myself deprived of so faithful a friend, and that such an eminent example of christian virtues, should be taken from the eyes of his children before they were of an age to love and follow it.

But as to worldly cares, which my friends thought fo heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as foon as we know ourselves.

If a person in a dream is disturbed with strange appearances, his trouble is over as soon as he is awake and sees that it was the folly of a dream.

Now when a right knowledge of ourfelves enters into our minds, it makes as great a change in all our thoughts and apprehensions, as when we awake from the wanderings of a dream.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glass, and so is afraid of stirring; or taking himself to be wax, dare not let the Sun shine upon him.

But, my children, there are things in the world which pass for wisdom, politeness, grandeur, happiness, and fine breeding, which shew as great ignorance of ourselves, and might as justly pass for thorough madness, as when a man fancies himfelf to be glafs, or ice.

A woman that dares not appear in the world without fine cloaths, that thinks it a happiness to have a face finely coloured, to have a skin delicately fair, that had rather die than be reduced to poverty and be forced to work for a poor maintenance, is as ignorant of herfelf to the full, as he that fancies himself to be glass.

For this reason, all my discourse with you has been to acquaint you with yourselves, and to accustom you to such books and devotions, as may best instruct you in this greatest of all knowledge.

You would think it hard, not to know the family into which you was born, what ancestors you were descended from, and what estate was to come to you. But, my children, you may know all this with exactness, and yet be as ignorant of yourselves, as he that takes himself to be wax.

For though you were all of you born of my body, and bear your father's name, yet you are all of you pure spirits. I do not mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep, and cloathing, but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. A being spiritual and rational in its nature, that is as contrary to all slessly or corporeal beings, as life is contrary to death; that is made in the image of God, to live for ever, never to cease any more, but to enjoy life, and reason, and knowlege, and happiness in the presence of God, and the society of angels, and glorious spirits, to all eternity.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your cloathing; something that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away, and to fignify no more to you, than the clothing and bodies of other people.

But, my children, you are not only in this manner fpirits, but you are fallen fpirits, that began your life in a ftate of corruption and diforder, full of tempers and passions, that blind and darken the reason of your mind and incline you to that which is hurtful.

Your bodies are not only poor and perifining like your clothes, but they are like infected clothes, that fill you with all difeafes and diftempers, which oppress the soul, with fickly appetites and vain cravings.

So that all of us are like two beings, that have, as it were, two hearts within us; with the one we fee, and taste, and admire reason, purity and holiness: with the other we incline to pride, and vanity, and sensual delights.

This internal war we always feel within us more or less; and if you would know the one thing necessary to all the world, it is this; to preserve and perfect all that is rational, holy and divine in our nature, and to mortify, remove and destroy all that vanity, pride, and sensuality, which springs from the corruption of our state?

Could you think, my children, when you look at the world, and fee what cuttoms, and fashions, and pleasures, and troubles, and projects, and tempers, employ the hearts and time of mankind, that things were thus, as I have told you?

But do not you be affected at thefe things, the world is in a great dream, and but few people are awake in it.

We fancy that we fall into darkness, when we die; but alas, we are most of us in the dark till then; and the eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are clofing.

You fee then your flate, my children; you are to honour, improve, and perfect the spirit that is within you, you are to prepare it for the kingdom of heaven, to nourish it with the love of God, and of virtue, to adorn it with good works, and to make it as holy and heavenly as you can. You are to preserve it from the errors and vanities of the world; to save it from the corruptions of which the body tempts it with.

the

You are to nourish your spirits with pious readings, and holy meditations, with watchings, fastings, and prayers, that you may taste, and relish, and desire that eternal state, which is to begin when this life ends.

As to your bodies, you are to confider them as poor, perifhing things, that are fickly and corrupt at prefent, and will foon drop into common dust. You are to watch over them as enemies, that are always trying to tempt and betray you, and so never follow their advice and counsel; you are to confider them as the place and habituation of your souls, and so keep them pure, and clean, and decent; you are to confider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them sood, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life.

Whilst you live thus, you live like yourselves; and whenever you have less regard to your souls, or more regard to your bodies, than this comes to; whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons, than upon persecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves, than he, that had rather have a laced coat,

For this reason, my children, I have taught you nothing that was dangerous for you to learn: I have kept you from every thing that might betray you into weakness and folly; or make you think any thing fine, but a fine mind; any thing happy but the favour of God; or any thing desirable, but to do all the good you possibly can.

Instead of the vain, immodest entertainment of Plays and Operas, I have taught you to delight in visiting the fick and poor. What music, and dancing, and divertions are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and psalms are to you. Your hands have not been employed in plaiting the hair, and adorning your persons; but in making clothes for the naked. You have not wasted your fortunes upon yourselves, but have added your labour to them, to do more good to other people.

Instead of forced shapes, patched faces, genteel airs, and affected motions, I have taught you to conceal your bodies with modest garments, and let the world have nothing to view of you, but the plainness and sincerity, and humility of all your behaviour.

You know, my children, the high perfection, and the great rewards of virginity; you know how it frees from worldly cares and troubles, and furnishes means and opportunities of higher advancement in a divine life; therefore love, and elteem, and honour virginity; bless God for all that glorious company of holy virgins, that from the beginning of christianity, have, in the feveral ages of the church, renounced the cares and pleasures of matrimony, to be perpetual examples of solitude, contemplation, and prayer.

But as every one has their proper gift from God, as I look upon you all to be fo many great bleffings of a married state; fo I leave it to your choice, either to do as I have done, or to aspire after higher degrees of perfection in a virgin state of life.

I defire nothing, I press nothing upon you, but to make the most of human life, and to aspire after perfection in whatever state of life you chuse.

Never therefore confider yourfelves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men; but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Learn to live for your own sakes, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your suture happiness.

Confider often how powerfully you are called to a virtuous life, and what great and glorious things God has done for you, to make you in love with every thing that can promote his glory.

Think upon the vanity and shortness of human life, and let death and eternity be often in your minds: for these thoughts will strengthen and exalt your minds, make you wise and judicious, and truly sensible of the littleness of human things.

Think of the happiness of prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing in the pre-

fence of God, and fee themfelves possessor of eternal glory. And then think how desirable a thing it is, to watch and pray, and do good as they did, that when you die you may have your lot amongst them.

Whether married therefore or unmarried, confider yourselves as mothers and fifters, as friends and relations to all that want your affistance; and never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of your-felves, is what I recommend to you with great earnest-ness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life. And besides the good you will thereby do to other people, every virtue of your own heart will be very much improved by it.

For next to reading, meditation, and prayer, there is nothing that fo fecures our hearts from foolish passions, nothing that preferves so holy and wife a frame of mind, as some useful, humble employment of our-felves.

Never therefore confider your labour as an amusement, that is to get rid of your time, and so may be as trisling as you please; but confider it as something that is to be serviceable to yourselves and others, that is to ferve some sober ends of life, to save and redeem your time, and make it turn to your account, when the works cf all people shall be tried by fire.

When you was little, I left you to little amusements, to please yourselves in any things that were free from harm; but as you are now grown up to a know-ledge of God, and yourselves; as your minds are now acquainted with the worth and value of virtue, and exalted with the great doctrines of religion, you are now to do nothing as children, but despite every thing that is poor, or vain, and impertinent; you are now to make the labours of your hands suitable to the piety of your hearts, and employ yourselves for the same ends, and with the same spirit, as you watch and pray.

For if there is any good to be done by your labour, if you can possibly employ yourselves usefully to other people, how silly is it, how contrary to the wisdom of religion, to make that a mere amusement, which might as easily be made an exercise of the greatest charity?

What would you think of the wisdom of him, that should employ his time in distilling of waters, and making liquors which nobody could use, merely to amuse himself with the variety of their colour and clearness, when, with less labour and expence, he might satisfy the wants of those who have nothing to drink.

Yet he would be as wifely employed, as those that are amufing themselves with such tedious works as they noither need, nor hardly know how to use them when they are finished; when with less labour and expence they might be doing as much good, as he that is clothing the naked, or vifiting the fick.

Be glad therefore to know the wants of the poorest people, and let your hands be employed in making such mean and ordinary things for them, as their necessities require. By thus making your labour a gift and service to the poor, your ordinary work will be changed into a holy service, and made as acceptable to God, as your devotions.

And as charity is the greatest of all virtues, as it always was the chief temper of the greatest saints; so nothing can make your own charity more amiable in the fight of God, than this method of adding your labour to it.

The humility also of this employment will be as beneficial to you, as the charity of it. It will keep you from all vain and proud thoughts of your own state and distinction in life, and from treating the poor as creatures of a different species. By accustoming yourselves to this labour and service to the poor, as the representatives of Jesus Christ, you will soon find your heart softened into the greatest meekness and lowliness towards them! You will reverence their estate and condition, think it an honour to serve them, and never be so pleased with yourself, as when you are most humbly employed in their service.

This will make you true disciples of your meek Lord and master, who came into the avorld not to be ministered unto, but to minister; and though he was Lord of all; and amongst

mongst them, as one that ferveth.

Christianity has then had its most glorious effects upon your hearts, when it has thus changed your spirit, removed all the pride of life from you, and made you delight in humbling yourselves beneath the lowest of all your fellow-creatures.

Live therefore my children, as you have begun your lives in humble labour for the good of others; and let ceremonious vifits, and vain acquaintances, have as little of your time as you possibly can. Contract no foolish friendships, or vain fondnesses for particular persons; but love them most, that most turn your love towards God, and your compassion towards all the world.

But above all, avoid the conversation of fine bred fops and beaux, and hate nothing more than the idle discourse, the flattery and compliments of that fort of men; for they are the shame of their own sex, and ought to be the abhorrence of yours.

When you go abroad, let humility, modesty, and a decent carriage, be all the state that you take upon you; and let tenderness, compassion, and good nature, be all the fine breeding that you flew in any place.

If evil fpeaking, fcandal, or backbiting, be the convertation where you happen to be, keep your heart and your tongue to yourfelf; be as much grieved, as if you was amongst cursing and swearing, and retire as soon as you can.

Though you intend to marry, yet let the time never come till you find a man that has those perfections, which you have been labouring after yourselves; who is likely to be a friend to all your virtues, and with whom it is better to live, than to want the benefit of his example.

Love poverty, and reverence poor people; as for many reasons, so particularly for this, because our blessed Saviour was one of the number, and because you may make them all so many friends and advocates with God for you.

Visit and converse with them frequently; you will often find simplicity, innocence, patience, fortitude, and great piety amongst them; and where they are not so, your good example may amend them.

Rejoice at every opportunity of doing an humble action, and exercifing the meekness of your rainds; whether it be, as the Scripture expresses it, in washing the faints' feet, that is, in waiting upon, and ferving those that are below you; or in bearing with the haughtiness and ill manners of those that are your equals, or above you. For there is nothing better than humility; it is the fruitful soil of all virtues; and every thing that is kind and good, naturally grows from it.

Therefore, my children, pray for, and practife humility, and reject every thing in drefs, or carriage, or converfation, that has any appearance of pride.

Strive to do every thing that is praife worthy, but do nothing in order to be praifed; nor think of any reward for all your labours of love and virtue, till Christ cometh with all his holy angels.

And above all, my children, have a care of vain and proud thoughts of your own virtues. For as foon as ever people live different from the common way of the world, and despites its vanities, the devil represents to their minds the heights of their own perfections; and is content they should excel in good works, provided that he can but make them proud of them.

Therefore watch over your virtues with a jealous eye, and reject every vain thought, as you would reject the most wicked imaginations; and think what a loss it would be to you, to have the fruit of all your good works, devoured by the vanity of your own minds.

Never, therefore, allow yourfelves to despife those who do not follow your rules of life; but force your hearts to love them, and pray to God for them; and let humility be always whispering it into your ears, that you yourfelves will fall from those rules to-morrow, if God should leave you to your own strength and wisdom.

When therefore you have fpent days and weeks well, do not fuffer your hearts to contemplate any thing as your own, but give all the glory to the goodness of

God,

God, who has carried you through fuch rules of holy living, as you were not able to observe by your own strength; and take care to begin the next day, not as proficients in virtue, that can do great matters, but as poor beginners, that want the daily assistance of God to fave you from the groffelt fins.

Your dear father was an humble, watchful, pious, wife man. Whilft his fickness would fuffer him to talk with me, his discourse was chiefly about your education. He knew the benefits of humility, he saw the ruins which pride made in our sex; and therefore he conjured me with the tenderest expressions, to renounce the fashionble way of educating daughters in pride and softness, in the care of their beauty and dress; and to bring you all up in the plainest, simplest instances of an humble, holy, and industrious life.

He taught me an admirable rule of humility, which he practifed all the days of his life; which was this; to let no morning pass, without thinking upon some frailty and infirmity of our own, that may put us to confusion, make us blush inwardly, and entertain a mean opinion of ourselves.

Think therefore, my children, that the foul of your good father, who is now with God, speaks to you through my mouth; and let the double defire of your father, who is gone, and I, who am with you, prevail upon you to love God, to study your own perfection, to practise humility, and with innocent labour and charity, to do all the good that you can to all your fellow-creatures, till God calls you to another life.

Thus did the pious widow educate her daughters.

The spirit of this education speaks so plainly for itself, that, I hope, I need say nothing in its justification. If we could see it in life, as well as read of it in books, the world would soon find the happy effects of it.

A daughter thus educated, would be a blefling to any family that the came into; a fit companion for a wife man, and make him happy in the government of his family, and the education of his children.

And fhe that either was not inclined, or could not difpose of herself well in marriage, would know how to live to great and excellent ends in a state of virginity.

A very

A very ordinary knowledge of the spirit of Christianity, feems to be enough to convince us, that no education can be of true advantage to young women, but that which trains them up in humble industry, in great plainness of life, in exact modesty of dress, manners, and carriage, and in strict devotion. For what should a Christian woman be but a plain, unaffected, modest, humble creature, averse to every thing in her dress and carriage, that can draw the eyes of beholders, or gratify the passions of lewd and amorous persons?

How great aftranger must he be to the Gospel, who does not know that it requires this to be the spirit of a pious

Our bleffed Saviour faith, Whosever looketh upon a woman to lust after her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart. St. Matt. v. 28.

Need an education which turns women's minds to the arts and ornaments of drefs and beauty, be more firongly condemned, than by these words? For furely, if the eye is so easily and dangerously betrayed, every art and ornament is sufficiently condemned, that naturally tends to betray it.

And how can a woman of piety more justly abhor and avoid any thing, than that which makes her person more a snare and temptation to other people? If suft and wanton eyes are the death of the soul, can any woman think themselves innocent, who with naked breasts, patched saces, and every ornament of dress, invite the eye to offend?

And as there is no pretence for innocence in fuch a behaviour, to neither can they tell how to fet any bounds to their guilt. For as they can never know how much, or how often they have occasioned fin in other people, so they can never know how much guilt will be placed to their own account.

This one would think flould fufficiently deter every pious woman from every thing that might render her the occasion of loose passions in other people.

St. Paul, speaking of a thing entirely innocent, reasons after this manner: But take heed, lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to those that are weak.

And through thy knowledge thy weak brother perish, for autom whom Christ died. But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no feels while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend, 1 Cor. viii. 9,-13.

Now if this is the fpirit of Christianity; if it requires us to abstain from things thus lawful, innocent, and useful, when there is any danger of betraying our weak brethren into an error thereby: Surely it cannot be reckoned too nice or needless a point of conscience, for women to avoid such things, as are neither innocent nor useful, but naturally tend to corrupt their own hearts, and raise ill passions in other people.

Surely every woman of Christian piety ought to say, in the spirit of the Apostle, if patching and paint, or any vain adorning of my person, be a natural means of making weak, unwary eyes to offend, I will renounce all these arts as long as I live, lest I should make my fellow creatures to offend.

I shall now leave this subject of humility; having said enough, as I hope, to recommend the necessity of making it the constant, chief subject of your devotion at this hour of prayer.

I have confidered the nature and necessity of humility, and its great importance to a religious life. I have shewn you how many difficulties are formed against it from our natural tempers, the spirit of the world, and the common education of both fexes.

These considerations will, I hope, instruct you how to form your prayers for it to the best advantage; and teach you the necessity of letting no day pass, without a serious earnest application to God, for the whole spirit of humility. Fervently beseeching him to fill every part of your foul with it, to make it the ruling, constant habit of your mind, that you may not only feel it, but feel all your other tempers arising from it; that you may have no thoughts, no desires, no designs, but such as are the true fruits of an humble, meek, and lowly heart.

That you may always appear poor, and little, and mean in your own eyes, and fully content that others should have the same opinion of you.

That the whole course of your life, your expence, your house, your drefs, your manner of eating, drinking, conversing, and doing every thing, may be so many continual proofs of the true unseigned humility of your heart.

That you may look for nothing, claim nothing, refent nothing; that you may go through all the actions and accidents of life calmly and quietly, as in the prefence of God, looking wholly unto him, acting wholly for him; neither feeking vain applause, nor resenting neglects, or affronts, but doing and receiving every thing in the meek and lowly spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

CHAP. XX.

Recommending Devotion at twelve o'clock, called in Scripture the fixth hour of the day. The frequency of devotion equally definable by all orders of people. Universal love is here recommended to be the subject of prayer at this hour. Of intercession, as an act of universal love.

T will perhaps be thought by fome people, that these hours of prayer come too thick; that they can only be observed by people of great leisure, and ought not to be pressed upon the generality of men, who have the cares of families, trades and employments; nor upon the gentry, whose state and sigure in the world cannot admit of this frequency of Devotion. And that it is only sit for monasteries and numeries, or such people as have no more to do in the world than they have.

To this it is answered,

First, That this method of Devotion is not pressed upon any fort of people, as absolutely necessary, but recommended to all people, as the best, the happiest and most perfect way of life.

And if a great and examplary Devotion is as much the greatest happiness and perfection of a merchant, a soldier, or a man of quality, as it is the greatest happiness, and perfection of the most retired contemplative life, then it is as proper to recommend it without any abatements to one order of men as to another. Because happiness and perfection are of the same worth and value to all people.

The gentleman and tradefman may, and must spend

much of their time differently from the pious monk in the cloyfter, or the contemplative hermit in the defart: But then, as the monk and hermit lofe the ends of retirement, unless they make it all ferviceable to devotion; so the gentleman and merchant fail of the greatest ends of a social life, and live to their loss in the world, unless devotion be their chief and governing temper.

It is certainly very honest and creditable for people to engage in trades and employments; it is reasonable for gentlemen to manage well their estates and families, and such recreations as are proper to their state. But then every gentleman and tradesman loses the greatest happiness of his creation, is robbed of something that is greater than all employments, distinctions and pleasures of the world, if he does not live more to Piety and Devotion, than to any thing else in the world.

Here are therefore no excuses made for men of business and figure in the world. First, Because it would be to excuse them from that which is the greatest end of living; and be only finding so many reasons for aking them less beneficial to themselves, and less ferviceable to God and the world.

Secondly, Because most men of business and figure engage too far in worldly matters; much farther than the reasons of human life, or the necessities of the world require.

Merchants and tradefman, for instance, are generally ten times farther engaged in business than they need; which is so far from being a reasonable excuse for their want of time for devotion, that it is their crime, and must be censured as a blameable instance of covetousness and ambition.

The gentry, and people of figure, either give themfelves up to ftate employments, or to the gratifications of their passions in a life of gaiety and debauchery; and if these things might be admitted as allowable avocations from devotion, devotion must be reckoned a poor circumstance of life.

Unlefs gentlemen can shew that they have another God, than the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; another nature, than that which is derived from Adam; another religion, than the Christian, it is in vain to plead their ftate, and dignity, and pleasures, as reasons for not pre-paring their souls for God, by a strict and regular devotion.

For fince piety and devotion are the common unchangeable means of faving all the fouls in the world that thall be faved, there is nothing left for the gentleman, the foldier, and the tradefman, but to take care that their feveral states be, by care and watchfulness, by meditation and prayer, made states of an exact and folid

If a merchant having forbore from too great business, that he might quietly attend on the fervice of God. should therefore die worth twenty, instead of fifty thoufand pounds, could any one fay that he had miftaken his calling, or gone a lofer out of the world?

If a gentleman should have killed fewer foxes, been less frequent at balls, gaming, and merry-meetings, because stated parts of his time had been given to retirement, to meditation and devotion, could it be thought, that when he left the world, he would regret the loss of those hours that he had given to the care and improvement of his foul?

If a tradefman, by afpiring after Christian perfection, and retiring himfelf often from his bufinefs, should, inftend of leaving his children fortunes to fpend in luxury and idleness, leave them to live by their own honest labour; could it be faid, that he had made a wrong use of the world, because he had shewn his children, that he had more regard to that which is eternal, than to this which is fo foon to be at an end.

Since therefore devotion is not only the best and most defireable practice in a cloyfter, but the best and most defireable practice of men, as men, and in every ftate of life, they that defire to be excused from it, because they are men of figure, and estates, and business, are no wifer than those that should defire to be excused from health and happiness, because they were men of figure and eftates.

I cannot fee why every gentleman, merchant, or foldier, should not put these questions seriously to himself:

"What is the beft thing for me to intend and drive at in all my actions? How thall I do to make the most of human life? What ways shall I wish that I had taken, when I am leaving the world?"

Now to be thus wife, and to make thus much use of our reason, seems to be but a small and necessary piece of wifdom. For how can we pretend to fense and judgment, if we dare not seriously consider, and answer, and govern our lives by that which such questions require of us?

Shall a nobleman think his birth too high a dignity to condescend to such questions as these? Or a tradesman think his bufiness too great, to take any care about himfelf?

Now here is defired no more devotion in any one's life, than the answering these few questions require.

Any devetion that is not to the greater advantage of him that uses it, than any thing that he can do in the room of it; any devotion that does not procure an infinitely greater good, than can be got by neglecting it, is freely yielded up, here is no demand of it.

But if people will live in so much ignorance, as never to put these questions to themselves, but push on a blind life at all chances, in quest of they do not know what or why; without ever confidering the worth, or value, or tendency of their actions; without confidering what God, reason and eternity, and their own happiness require of them; it is for the honour of devotion that none can neglect it, but those who are thus inconsiderate, who dare not enquire after that which is the best, and most worthy of their choice.

It is true, Claudius, you are a man of figure and estate, and are to act the part of fuch a station of human life; you are not called, as Elijah was, to be a prophet, or as St Paul, to be an apostle.

But will you therefore not love yourfelf? Will you not feek and fludy your own happiness, because you are not called to preach up the fame things to other peo.

You would think it very abfurd, for a man not to vadue his own health, because he was not a physician; or the preservation of his limbs, because he was not a bone fetter. Yet it is more abfurd for you, Claudius, to ne-

M 2 glect glect the improvement of your foul in piety, because you are not an apostle, or a bishop.

Consider this text of Scripture, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if through the spirit ye do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. Rom. viii. 13, 14. Do you think that this scripture does not equally relate to all mankind? Can you find any exception here for men of figure and estate? Is not a spiritual and devout life here made the common condition, on which all men are to become sons of God? Will you leave hours of prayer, and rules of devotion, to particular states of life, when nothing but the same spirit of devotion can save you, or any man, from eternal death?

Consider again this text: For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or had. 2 Cor. v. 10. Now if your estate would excuse you from appearing before this judgment-seat; if your figure could protect you from receiving according to your works, there would be some pretence for your leaving devotion to other people. But if you who are now thus distinguished, must then appear naked amongst common souls, without any other distinction from others, but such as your virtues or sins give you; does it not as much concern you, as any prophet, or apostle, to make the best provision for the best rewards at that great day?

Again, confider this great doctrine of the apostle: For none of us, that is, of us Christians, liveth to himself: For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord. For to this end Christ both wheel, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living.

Now are you, Claudius, excepted out of the doctrine of this text? Will you, because of your condition, leave it to any particular fort of people, to live and die unto Christ? If so, you must leave it to them, to be redeemed by the death and refurrection of Christ. For it is the express doctrine of the text, that for this end Christ died and rose again, that none of us should live to himfelf. It is not that priests, or apostles, monks, or hermits, mits, should live no longer to themselves; but that none of us, that is, no Christian, of what state soever, should live unto himself.

If therefore there be any inftances of piety, any rules of devotion, which you can neglect and yet live as truly unto Chrift, as if you observed them, this text calls you to no such devotion. But if you forfake such devotion, as you yourself know is expected from some particular forts of people; such devotion as you know becomes people that live wholly unto Chrift, that aspire after great piety; if you neglect such devotion for any worldly consideration, that you may live more to your own temper and taste, more to the fashions and ways of the world, you forfake the terms on which all Christians are to receive the benefit of Chrise's death and resurrection.

Observe farther, how the same doctrine is taught by St Peter; As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. 1 Pet. i. 15.

If therefore, Claudius, you are one of those that are here called, you see what it is that you are called to. It is not to have so much religion as suits with your temper, your business, or your pleasures; it is not to a particular fort of piety, that may be sufficient for gentlemen of figure and estates; but it is first, to be holy, as he which hath called you is holy; secondly, it is to be thus holy in all manner of conversation; that is, to carry this spirit and degree of holiness into every part, and through the whole form of your life.

And the reason the apostle immediately gives, why this spirit of holiness must be the common spirit of Christians, as such, is very affecting, and such as equally calls upon all forts of Christians. Forasmuch as ye know, says he, that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation—but with the precious blood of Christ, &c.

As if he had faid, Forafmuch as ye know ye were made capable of this ftate of holinefs, entered into a fociety with Christ, and made heirs of his glory, not by any human means, but by such a mysterious instance of love, as infinitely exceeds every thing that can be thought of in this world; since God has redeemed you to himfelf, and your own happiness, at so great a price, how base and shameful must it be, if you do not henceforth devote yourselves wholly to the glory of God, and become holy, as he who hath called you is holy?

M 3 felf

If therefore, Claudius, you confider your figure and eftate; or if, in the words of the text, you confider your gold and filver, and the corruptible things of this life, as any reason why you may live to your own humour and fancy, why you may neglect a life of strict piety and great devotion; if you think any thing in the world can be an excuse for your not imitating the holiness of Christ in the whole course and form of your life, you may make yourself as guilty, as if you should neglect the holiness of Christianity for the sake of picking straws.

For the greatness of this new state of life to which we are called in Christ Jesus, to be for ever as the angels of God in heaven, and the greatness of the price by which we are made capable of this state of glory, has turned every thing that is worldly, temporal, and corruptible into an equal littleness; and make it as great baseness and folly, as great a contempt of the blood of Christ, to neglect any degrees of holiness, because you are a man of some estate and quality, as it would be to neglect it, because you had a fancy to pick straws.

Again, the same apossle faith, Know ye not, that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are $G \circ d's$ . 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20.

How poorly therefore, Claudius, have you read the fcripture? how little do you know of Christianity, if you can yet talk of your estate and condition, as a pretence for a freer kind of life?

Are you any more your own, than he that has no eftate or dignity in the world? Must mean and little people preserve their bodies as temples of the Holy Ghost, by watching, fasting, and prayer; but may you indulge yours in idleness, in lusts, and sensuality, because ye have so much rent, or such a title of distinction? How poor and ignorant are such thoughts as these? And yet you must either think thus, or else acknowledge, that the holi-holiness of faints, prophets, and apostles, is the holiness that you are to labour after with all the diligence and care that you can.

And if you leave it to others, to live in fuch piety and devotion, in fuch felf-denial, humility and temperance, as may render them able to glorify God in their body, and in their spirit; you must leave it to them also, to have the benefit of the blood of Christ.

Again; the Apostle saith, You know how we exhorted, comforted, and charged every one of you, that you would walk worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdom and glory, 1 Theff. ii. 11.

You perhaps, Claudius, have often heard these words without ever thinking how much they required of you. And yet you cannot consider them, without perceiving to what an eminent state of holiness they call you.

For how can the holiness of the Christian life be set before you in higher terms, than when it is represented to you, as walking worthy of God? Can you think of any at tements of virtue, any neglects of devotion, that are well consistent with a life, that is to be made worthy of God? Can you suppose that any man walks in this manner, but he that watches over all his steps; and considers how every thing he does, may be done in the spirit of holiness? And yet as high as these expressions carry this holiness, it is here plainly made the necessary tholiness of all Christians. For the apostle does not here exhort his fellow Apostles and Saints to this holiness, but he commands all Christians to endeavour after it: We charged, says he, every one of you, that you would walk worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdom and glory.

Again; St Peter faith, If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability that God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified in Christ Jesus, 1 Pet. iv. 11.

Do you not here, Claudius, plainly perceive your high calling? Is he that fpeaketh, to have fuch regard to his words, that he appear to fpeak as by the direction of God? Is he that giveth, to take care that he fo giveth, that what he disposeth of may appear to be a gift that M 4 he hath of God? And is all this to be done, that God may be glorified in all things?

Must it not then be said, Has any man nobility, dignity of state, or figure in the world? let him so use his nobility or figure of life, that it may appear he uses these as the gifts of God, for the greater setting forth of his glory. Is there now, Claudius, any thing forced, or sar-fetched in this conclusion? It is not the plain sense of the words, that every thing in life is to be made a matter of holiness unto God? If so, then your estate and dignity is so far from excusing you from great piety and holiness of life, that it lays you under a greater necessity of living more to the glory of God, because you have more of his gifts that may be made serviceable to it.

For people therefore of figure, or business, or dignity in the world, to leave great piety and eminent devotion to any particular orders of men, or such as they think have little else to do in the world, is to leave the kingdom of God to them. For it is the very end of Christianity to redeem all orders of men into one holy society, that rich and poor, high and low, masters and servants, may in one and the same spirit of piety, become a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an hely nation, a peculiar people, that are to shew forth the prayes of him, who hath called them out of darkness, into his marvellous light. 1 Peter ii. 9.

Thus much being faid to fhew, that great devotion and holines is not to be left to any particular fort of people, but to be the common spirit of all that desire to live up to the terms of common Christianity; I now proceed to consider the nature and necessity of universal love, which is here recommended to be the subject of your devotion at this hour. You are here also called to intercession, as the most proper exercise to raise and preserve that love. By intercession is meant a praying to God, and interceding with him for our fellow creatures.

Our bleffed Lord hath recommended his love to us, as the pattern and example of our love to one another. As therefore he is continually making intercession for us all, fo ought we to intercede and pray for one another.

A new commandment, faith he, I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another.

The newness of this precept did not consist in this, that men were commanded to love one another; for this was an old precept, both of the law of Moses, and of nature. But it was new in this respect, that it was to imitate a new, and till then unheard of example of love; it was to love one another, as Christ had loved us.

And if men are to know that we are disciples of Christ, by thus loving one another according to his new example of love; then it is certain, that if we are void of this love, we make it as plainly known unto men, that we are none of his disciples.

There is no principle of the heart that is more acceptable to God, than an universal fervent love to all mankind, wishing and praying for their happiness; because there is no principle of the heart that makes us more like God, who is love and goodness itself, and created all beings for their enjoyment of happiness.

The greatest idea that we can frame of God is, when we conceive him to be a being of infinite love and goodness; using an infinite wisdom and power for the common good and happiness of all his creatures.

The highest notion therefore that we can form of man is when we conceive him as like to God in this respect as he can be; using all his finite faculties, whether of wisdom, power, or prayers, for the common good of all his fellow-creatures; Heartily defiring they may have all the happiness they are capable of, and as many benefits and affistances from him, as his state and condition in the world will permit him to give them.

And on the other hand, what a baseness and iniquity is there in all instances of hatred, envy, spite, and ill-will; if we consider, that every instance of them is so far acting in opposition to God, and intending mischief and harm to those creatures, which God favours, and protects, and preferves, in order to their happiness? An ill-natured man amongst God's creatures, is the most perverse creature in the world, acting contrary to that love, by which himself subsists, and which alone gives subsistence to all that variety of beings, that enjoy life in any part of the creation. Whatsever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do unto them.

Now though this is a doctrine of strict justice, yet it is only an universal love that can comply with it. For as love is the measure of our acting towards ourselves, so we can never act in the same manner towards other people, till we look upon them with that love with which we look upon ourselves.

As we have no degrees of fpite, or envy, or ill-will to ourfelves, fo we cannot be disposed towards others as we are towards ourselves, till we universally renounce all instances of spite and envy, and ill-will, even in the fniallest degrees.

If we had any imperfection in our eyes, that made us fee any one thing wrong, for the fame reason they would fliew us an hundred things wrong.

So if we have any temper of our hearts, that makes us envious, or spiteful, or ill-natured towards any one man, the same temper will make us envious, and spiteful, and ill-natured towards a great many more.

If therefore we defire this divine virtue of love, we must exercise and practise our hearts in the love of all, because it is not Christian love, till it is the love of all.

If a man could keep this whole law of love, and yet offend in one point, he would be guilty of all. For as one allowed instance of injustice destroys the justice of all our other actions, so one allowed instance of envy, spite, and ill-will, renders all our other acts of benevolence and affection nothing worth.

Acts of love that proceed not from a principle of universal love, are but like acts of justice, that proceed from a heart not disposed to universal justice.

A love which is not universal, may indeed have tenderness and affection, but it hath nothing of righteousness or piety in it; it is but humour, and temper, or interest, or such a love as Publicans and heathers practise.

All particular envies and spites, are as plain departures from the spirit of Christianity, as any particular acts of injustice. For it is as much a law of Christ, to treat

every

every body as your neighbour, and to love your neighbour as yourfelf, as it is a law of Christianity, to abstain from theft.

Now the noblest motive to this universal tenderness and affection, is founded in this doctrine, God is love, and he that dwelleth in him, dwelleth in God.

Who therefore, whose heart has any tendency towards God, would not aspire after this divine temper, which so changes and exalts our nature into an union with him.

How should we rejoice in the exercise and practice of this love, which so often as we feel it, is so often an affurance to us, that God is in us, that we act according to his spirit, who is love itself? But we must observe that love has then only this mighty power of uniting us to God, when it is so pure and universal, as to imitate that love, which God beareth to all his creatures.

God willeth the happiness of all beings, though it is no happiness to himself. Therefore we must desire the happiness of all beings, though no happiness cometh to

God equally delighteth in the perfections of all his creatures, therefore we should rejoice in those perfections, wherever we see them, and be as glad to have other people perfect as ourselves.

As God forgiveth all, and giveth grace to all, so we should forgive all those injuries and affronts which we receive from others, and do all the good that we can to them.

God alnighty, besides his own great example of love which ought to draw all his creatures after it, has so provided for us, and made our happiness so common to us all, that we have no occasion to envy or hate one another.

For we cannot fland in one another's way, or by enjoying any particular good, keep another from his full flare of it. As we cannot be happy, but in the enjoyment of God, fo we cannot rival, or rob one another of this happiness.

And as to other things, the enjoyments and profperities of this life, they are so little in themselves, so foreign to our happiness, and, generally speaking, so contrary to that which they appear to be, that they are no foun-dation for envy, or fpite, or hatred.

How filly would it be to envy a man, that was drinking poison out of a golden cup? and yet who can fay, that he is acting wifer than thus, when he is envying any inftance of worldly greatness?

How many faints has adverfity fent to heaven? And how many poor finners has profperity plunged into everlasting misery? A man seems then to be in the most glorious state, when he has conquered, disgraced, and humbled his enemy; though it may be, that same conquest has saved his adversary, and undone himself.

This man had perhaps never been debauched, but for his fortune and advancement; that had never been pious

She that is envied for her beauty, may perchance own all her mifery to it; and another may be for ever happy, for having had no admirers of her person.

One man fucceeds in every thing, and so loses all: Another meets with nothing but crosses and disappointments, and therby gains more than all the world is worth.

This clergyman may be undone by his being made a bishop; and that may fave both himself and others, by being fixed to his first poor vicarage.

How envied was Alexander, when conquering the world, he built towns, fet up his statues, and left marks of his glory in fo many kingdoms! And how despised was the poor preacher St Paul, when he was beaten with rods! And yet how strangely was the world mistaken in their judgment! How much to be envied was St Paul! How much to be pitied was Alexander!

These few reflections sufficiently shew us, that the different conditions of this life have nothing in them to excite our uneasy passions, nothing that can reasonably

To proceed now to another motive to this univerfal love.

Our power of doing external acts of love and goodness, is often very narrow and restrained. There are, it may be, but sew people to whom we can contribute any worldly relief.

But

But though our outward means of doing good are often thus limited, yet if our hearts are but full of love and goodnefs, we get as it were an infinite power; because God will attribute to us those good works, those acts of love and tender charities, which we fincerely defired, and would gladly have performed, had it been in our power.

You cannot heal all the fick, relieve all the poor; you cannot comfort all in diffrefs, nor be a father to all the fatherlefs. You cannot, it may be, deliver many from their misfortunes, or teach them to find comfort in

God.

But if there is a love and tenderness in your heart that delights in these good works, and excites you to do all that you can; if your love has no bounds, but continually wishes and prays for the relief and happiness of all that are in distress, you will be received by God as a benefactor to those, who have had nothing from you but your good will, and tender affections.

You cannot build hospitals for the incurable; you cannot erect monasteries for the education of persons in holy solitude, continual prayer and mortification; but if you join in your heart with those that do, and thank God for their pious designs; if you are a friend to these great friends to mankind, and rejoice in their eminent virtues, you will be received by God as a sharer of such good works, as though they had none of your hands, yet they had all your heart.

This confideration furely is fufficient to make us look to, and watch over our hearts with all diligence; to study the improvement of our inward tempers, and aspire after every height and perfection of a loving, charitable, and benevolent mind.

And on the other hand, we may hence learn the great evil and mischief of all wrong turns of mind, of envy, spite, hatred, and ill-will. For if the goodness of our hearts will entitle us to the reward of good actions, which we never performed; it is certain that the badness of our hearts, our envy, ill-nature and hatred, will bring us under the guilt of actions that we have never committed.

As he that lusteth after a woman shall be reckoned an adulterer, though he has only committed the crime in his heart; fo the malicious, fpiteful, ill-natured man, that only fecretly rejoices at evil, fliall be reckoned a murderer, though he has fhed no blood.

Since therefore our hearts, which are always naked, and open to the eyes of God, give fuch an exceeding extent and increase either to our virtues or vices, it is our best and greatest business to govern the motions of our hearts, to watch, correct, and improve the inward state

Now there is nothing that fo much exalts our fouls, as this heavenly love, it cleanfes and purifies like a holy fire, and all ill tempers fall away before it. It makes room for all virtues, and carries them to their greatest height. Every thing that is good and holy grows out of it, and it becomes a continual fource of all holy defires, and pious practices. By love, I do not mean any natural tenderness, which is more or less in people according to their constitutions; but I mean a larger principle of the foul, founded in reason and piety, which makes us tender, kind, and benevolent to all our fellow-creatures, as creatures of God, and for his sake.

It is this love that loves all things in God, as his creatures, as the images of his power, as the creatures of his goodness, as parts of his family, as members of his fociety, that becomes a holy principle of all great and good actions.

The love therefore of our neighbour is only a branch of our love to God. For when we love God with all our hearts, and with all our fouls, and with all our ftrength, we shall necessarily love those beings that are fo nearly related to God, that have every thing from him, and created by him, to be objects of his own eternal love. If I hate or despise any one man in the world, I hate something that God cannot hate, and despise that which he loves.

And can I think that I love God with all my heart, whilft I hate that which belongs only to God, which has no other mafter but him, which bears his image, is part of his family, and exists only by the continuance of his love towards it? It was the impossibility of this that made St John fay, That if any man faith, he loveth God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar.

These reasons sufficiently shew us, that no love is ho-

For if religion requires me to love all persons, as-God's creatures, that belong to him, that bear his image, enjoy his protection, and make parts of his family and houshold; if these are the great and necessary reasons why I should live in love and friendship with any one man in the world, they are the farm great and necessary reasons why I should live in love and friendship with every one man in the world: and confequently I offend against all these reasons, and break through all these ties and obligations, whenever I want love towards any one man. The fintherefore of hating or defpifing any one man, is like the fin of hating all God's creation; and the neceffity of loving any one man, is the same necessity of loving every man in the world. And though many people may appear to us ever fo finful, odious, or extravagant in their conduct, we must never look upon that as the least motive for any contempt or difregard of them, but look upon them with the greater compassion, as being in the most pitiable condition that can be.

As it was the fins of the world, that made the fon of God become a compassionate suffering advocate for all mankind; so none is of the Spirit of Christ, but he that has the utmost compassion for sinners. Nor is there any greater sign of your own perfection, than when you find yourself all love and compassion towards them that are very weak and defective. And on the other hand, you have never less reason to be pleased with yourself, than when you find yourself most angry and offended at the behaviour of others. All fin is certainly to be hated and abhorred wherever it is; but then we must set ourselves against sin, as we do against sickness and diseases, by shewing ourselves tender and compassionate to the sick

All other hatred of fin, which does not fill the heart with the foftest, tenderest affections towards persons miserable in it, is the servant of fin at the same time that it seems to be hating it.

And there is no temper which even good men ought more carefully to watch and guard against than this. For it is a temper that lurks and hides itself under the cover of many virtues, and by being unfuspected does the more mischief.

A man naturally fancies, that it is his own exceeding love of virtue that makes him not able to bear with those that want it And when he abhors one man, despifes another, and cannot bear the name of a third, he fupposes it all to be a proof of his own high fense of virtue, and just hatred of fin.

And yet one would think, that a man needed no other

cure for this temper, than this one reflection:

That if this had been the spirit of the Son of God, if he had hated fin in this manner, there had been no redemption of the world: That if God had hated finners in this manner day and night, the world itself had ceased long ago.

This therefore we may take for a certain rule, that the more we partake of the divine nature, the more improved we are ourselves; and the higher our sense of virtue is, the more we shall pity and compassionate those The fight of fuch people will then, inthat want it. flead of raifing in us a haughty contempt, or peevish indignation towards them, fill us with fuch bowels of compassion, as when we see the miseries of an hospital.

That the follies therefore, crimes and ill behaviour of our fellow-creatures, may not leffon that love and tenderness which we are to have for all mankind, we should often consider the reasons on which this duty of love is founded.

Now we are to love our neighbour, that is, all mankind, not because they are wife, holy, virtuous, or wellbehaved; for all mankind neither ever was, nor ever will be fo; therefore it is certain, that the reason of our being obliged to love them, cannot be founded in their virtue.

Again; if their virtue or goodness were the reason of our being obliged to love people, we fhould have no rule to proceed by; because though some people's virtue or vices are very notorious, yet, generally speaking, we are but very ill judges of the virtue and merit of other people.

Thirdly, We are fure that the virtue or merit of perfons, is not the reason of our being obliged to love them, because we are commanded to pay the highest instances of love to our worst enemies; we are to love, and bless, and pray for those that most injuriously treat us. therefore is demonstration, that the merit of persons is not the reason on which our obligation to love them is founded.

Let us farther consider, what that love is, which we owe to our neighbour. It is to love him as ourselves, that is, to have all those fentiments towards him, which we have towards ourselves; to wish him every thing that we may lawfully wish to ourselves; to be glad of every good, and forry for every evil that happens to him: and be ready to do him all fuch acts of kindness, as we are always ready to do ourfelves.

This love therefore, you fee, is nothing elfe but a love of benevolence; it requires nothing of us, but fuch good withes, tender affections, and fuch acts of kindness, as we shew to ourselves.

This is all the love that we owe to the best of men; and we are never to want any degree of this love to the worst, or most unreasonable man in the world.

Now what is the reason why we are to love every man in this manner? It is answered that our obligations to love all men in this manner, is founded upon many reasons.

First, Upon a reason of equity: for if it is just, to love ourselves in this manner, it must be unjust to deny any degree of this love to others, because every man is so exactly of the fame nature, and in the fame condition as ourfelves.

If therefore your own crimes and follies do not lessen your obligation to feek your own good, and wish well to yourfelf; neither do the follies and crimes of your neighbour lessen your obligation to wish and seek the good of your neighbour.

Another reason for this love is sounded in the authority of God, who has commanded us to love every man as yourfelf.

Thirdly, We are obliged to this love, in imitation of God's goodness, that we may be children of our Father, which is in Heaven, who willeth the happiness of all his

creatures, and maketh his Sun to rise on the evil, and on the good.

Fourthly, Our redemption by Jesus Christ, calleth us to the exercise of this love, who came from heaven, and laid down his life, out of love to the whole sinful world.

Fifthly, By the command of our Lord and Saviour, who has required us to love one another, as he has loved us.

These are the great perpetual reasons, on which our obligation to love all mankind as ourselves, is founded.

These reasons never vary, or change, they always continue in their full force; and therefore equally oblige at all times, and in regard to all perfons.

God loves us, not because we are wise, and good, and holy, but in pity to us, because we want this happiness: He loves us, in order to make us good. Our love therefore must take this course; not looking for, or requiring the merit of our brethren, but pitying their disorders, and withing them all the good that they want, and are capable of receiving.

It appears now plainly from what has been faid, that the love which we owe to our brethren, is only as love of benevolence. Secondly, That this duty of benevolence is founded upon fuch reasons as never vary or change; such as have no dependence upon the qualities of persons. From whence it follows, that it is the same great sin, to want this love to a bad man, as to want it to a good man. Because he that denies any of this benevolence to a bad man, offends against all the same reasons of love, as he does that denies any benevolence to a good man: And consequently it is the same sin.

When therefore you let loofe an ill natured paffion, either of hatred or contempt towards (as you fuppose) an ill man, consider what you would think of another, that was doing the same towards a good man, and be affared that you are committing the same sin.

You will perhaps fay, How is it possible to love a good and a bad man in the fame degree?

Just

Just as it is possible to be as just and faithful to a good man, as to an evil man. Now are you in any difficulty about performing justice and faithfulness to a bad man? Are you in any doubts, whether you need be so just and faithful to him, as you need be to a good man? Now why is it, that you are in no doubt about it? It is because you know that justice and faithfulness are founded upon reasons that never vary or change, that have no dependance upon the merits of men, but are founded in the nature of things, in the laws of God, and therefore are to be observed with unequal exactness towards good and bad men.

Now do but think thus justly of charity, or love to your neighbour, that it is founded upon reasons, that vary not, that have no dependance upon the merits of men, and then you will find it as possible to perform the same exact charity, as the same exact justice to all men, whether good or bad.

You will perhaps farther ask, if you are not to have a particular efteem, veneration and reverence for good men? It is answered; Yes. But then this high efteem and veneration, is a thing very different from that love of benevolence which we owe to our neighbour.

The high efteem and veneration which you have for a man of eminent piety, is no act of charity to him; it is not of pity and compaffion that you so reverence him, but it is rather an act of charity to yourself, that such esteem and veneration may excite you to follow his example.

You may, and ought to love, like, and approve the life which the good man leads; but then this is only the loving of virtue, wherever we fee it. And we do not love virtue with the love of benevolence, as any thing that wants our good wishes, but as fomething that is our proper good.

The whole of the matter is this. The actions which you are to love, efteem and admire, are the actions of good and pious men; but the perions to whom you are to do all the good you can, in all forts of kindness and compassion, are all persons whether good or bad.

This distinction betwixt love of benevolence, and e-

fteem or veneration, is very plain and obvious. And you may perhaps still better see the plainness and necessity of it, by this following instance.

No man is to have a high esteem, or honour, for his own accomplishments, or behaviour; yet every man is to love himself, that is, to wish well to himself; therefore this distinction betwixt love and esteem, is not only plain, but very necessary to be observed.

Again: if you think it hardly possible to dislike the actions of unreasonable men, and yet have a true love for them: Consider this with relation to yourself.

It is very possible, I hope, for you not only to dislike, but to deteit and abhor a great many of your own past actions, and to accuse yourself with great folly for them. But do you then lose any of those tender fentiments towards yourself, which you used to have? Do you then cease to wish well to yourself? Is not the love of yourself as strong then, as at any other time?

Now what is thus possible with relation to ourselves, is in the same manner possible with relation to others. We may have the highest good wishes towards them, desiring for them every good that we desire for ourselves, and yet at the same time dislike their way of life.

To proceed; all that love which we may juitly have for ourfelves, we are in strict justice obliged to exercise towards all other men; and we offend against the great law of our nature, and the greatest laws of God, when our tempers towards others are different from those which we have towards ourselves.

Now that felf-love which is just and reasonable, keeps us constantly tender, compassionate, and well affected towards ourselves; if therefore you do not feel these kind dispositions towards all other people, you may be assured, that you are not in that state of charity, which is the very life and foul of christian piety.

You know how it hurts you to be made the jest and ridicule of other people; how it grieves you to be robbed of your reputation, and deprived of the favourable opinion of your neighbours: If therefore you expose others to fcorn and contempt in any degree; if it pleases you to see or hear of their frailties or infirmities; or if you are only

only loth to conceal their faults, you are fo far from loving fuch people as yourfelf, that you may be justly fupposed to have as much hatred for them, as you have love for yourself. For such tempers are as truly the proper fruits of hatred, as the contrary tempers are the proper fruits of love.

And as it is a certain fign that you love yourfelf, because you are tender of every thing that concerns you: so it is as certain a fign that you hate your neighbour, when you are pleased with any thing that hurts

But now, if the want of a true and exact charity be fo great a want, that, as St Paul faith, it renders our greatest virtues but empty sounds, and tinkling cymbals, how highly does it concern us to study every art, and practise every method of raising our souls to this state of charity? It is for this reason, that you are here desired, not to let this hour of prayer pass, without a full and solemn supplication to God, for all the instances of an universal love and benevolence to all mankind.

Such daily constant devotion, being the only likely means of preserving you in such a state of love, as is necessary to prove you to be a true sollower of Jesus Christ.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the necessity and benefit of Intercossion, considered as an exercise of universal love. How all orders of men are to pray and intercede with God for one another. How naturally such intercession amends and reforms the hearts of those that use it.

THAT intercession is a great and necessary part of Christian Devotion, is very evident from Scripture.

The first followers of Christ seem to support all their love, and to maintain all their intercourse and correspondence, by mutual prayers for one another.

St

St Paul, whether he writes to churches, or particular persons, shews his intercession to be perpetual for them, that they are the constant subject of his prayers.

Thus to the Phillipians, I thank my God upon every remembrance of you. Always in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy. Phil. i. 4, 5, Here we see, not only a continual intercession, but performed with so much gladness as shews that it was an exercise of love,

His devotion had also the same care for particular perfons; as appears by the following passage. I thank my God, whom I serve from my foresathers, with a pure confcience, that, without ceasing, I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day, 2 Tim. i. 3. How holy an acquaintance and friendship was this, how worthy of persons that were raised above the world, and related to one another, as new members of a kingdom of heaven!

Apostles and great faints did not only thus benefit and bless particular churches, and private persons; but they themselves also received graces from God by the prayers of others. Thus saith St Paul to the Corinthians, You also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf, 2 Cor. i. 11.

This was the ancient friendship of Christians, uniting and cementing their hearts, not by worldly considerations, of human passions, but by the mutual communications of spiritual bleshings, by prayers and thanksgivings to God for one another.

It was this holy interceffion that raifed Christians to fuch a state of mutual love, as far exceeded all that had been praifed and admired in human friendship. And when the same spirit of intercession is again in the world, when Christianity has the same power over the hearts of people, that it then had, this holy friendship will be again in fashion, and Christians will be again the wonder of the world, for that exceeding love which they bear to one another.

For a frequent intercession with God, earnestly befeeching him to forgive the sins of all mankind, to bless them with his providence, enlighten them with his

Spirit,

Spirit, and bring them to everlasting happiness, is the divinest exercise that the heart of man can be engaged in.

Be daily therefore on your knees in a folemn deliberate performance of this devotion, praying for others in forms, with fuch length and importunity, and earnest-ness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natured passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others,

For he that daily prays to God, that all men may be happy in heaven, takes the likelieft way to make him wish for, and delight in their happiness on earth. And it is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to fee him enjoy the much finaller gifts of God in this short and low state of human life. For how strange and unnatural would it be to pray to God to grant health and a longer life to a fick man, and at the same time to envy him the poor pleafures of agreeable medicines? Yet this would be no more strange, or unnatural, than to pray to God that your neighbour may enjoy the highest degrees of his mercy and favour, and yet at the fame time envy him the little credit and figure he hath amongst his fellowcreatures.

When therefore you have once habituated your heart to a ferious performance of this holy interceffion, you have done a great deal to render it incapable of fpite and envy, and to make it naturally delight in the happiness of all mankind. This is the natural effect of a general intercession for all mankind. But the greatest benefits of it are then received, when it deteends to such particular instances as our state and condition in life

Though we are to treat all mankind as neighbours and brethren, as any occasion offers; yet as we can only live in the actual fociety of a few, and are by our state and condition more particularly related to some than others; so when our intercession is made an exercise of love and care for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation, it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts. If therefore you should always change and alter your intercessions according as the needs and necessities of your neighbours or acquaintance feem to require; befeeching God to deliver them from fuch or fuch particular evils, or to grant them this or that particular gift, or blefling; fuch interceffions, besides the great charity of them, would have a mighty effect upon your own heart, as disposing you to every other good office, and to the exercise of every other virtue towards fuch persons, as have so often a place in your pravers.

This would make it pleasant to you to be courteous, civil and condescending to all about you; and make you unable to fay, or do, a rude, or hard thing to those, for whom you had used yourself to be so kind and compasfionate in your prayers. For there is nothing that makes us love a man fo much, as praying for him; and when you can once do this fincerely for any man, you have fitted your foul for the performance of every thing that is kind and civil towards him. This will fill your heart with a generofity and tenderness, that will give you a better and fweeter behaviour, than any thing that is call-

By confidering yourfelf as an advocate with God for your neighbours and acquaintance, you would never find it hard to be at peace with them yourfelf. It would be eafy to you to bear with, and forgive those, for whom you particularly implored the divine mercy and forgive-

nefs.

Such prayers as these among st neighbours and acquaintance, would unite them to one another in the strongest bonds of love and tenderness. It would exalt and ennoble their fouls, and teach them to confider one another in a higher state, as members of a spiritual society, that are created for the enjoyment of the common bleffings of God, and fellow-heirs of the fame future glory. And by being thus defirous, that every one should have their full share of the favours of God, they would not only be content, but glad to fee one another happy in the little enjoyments of this transitory life. These would be the natural effects of fuch an intercession amongst people of the same town or neighbourhood, or that were ac-

Ouranius is a holy priest, full of the spirit of the go-spel, watching, labouring, and praying for a poor country village. Every soul in it is as dear to him as him-self; and he loves them all, as he loves himself; because he prays for them all, as often as he prays for himself. If his whole life is one continual exercise of great zeal and labour, hardly ever satisfied with any degrees of care and watchfulness, it is because he has learned the great value of souls, by so often appearing before God, as an intercessor for them.

He never thinks he can love, or do enough for his flock; because he never considers them in any other view, than as so many persons, that by receiving the gifts and graces of God, are to become his hope, his joy, and his crown of rejoicing. He goes about his Parish, and visits every body in it; but visits in the same spirit of piety that he preaches to them; he visits them to encourage their virtues, to assist them with his advice and counsel, to discover their manner of life, and to know the state of their souls, that he may interceed with God for them, according to their particular necessities.

When Ouranius first entered into holy orders, he had a haughtines in his temper, a great contempt and difregard for all foolish and unreasonable people; but he has prayed away this spirit, and has now the greatest tenderness for the most obstinate sinners; because he is always hoping, that God will sooner or later hear those prayers that he makes for their repentance. The rudeness, illnature, or perverse behaviour of any of his slock, used at first to betray him into impatience; but it now raises no other passion in him, than a desire of being upon

Thus have his prayers for others, altered and amended the state of his own heart. It would strangely delight you to see with what spirit he converses, with what tenderness he reproves, with what affection he exhorts, and with what vigour he preaches; and it is all owing to this, because he reproves, exhorts, and preaches to those for whom he first prays to God. This devotion, softens his heart, enlightens his mind, sweetens his temper, and makes every thing that comes from him, infructive, amiable and affecting. At his first coming to this little village, it was as disagreeable to him as a prifon, and every day seemed too tedious to be endured in so retired a place. He thought his parish was too full of poor and mean people, that were none of them fit for the conversation of a gentleman. This put him upon a close application to his studies. He kept much at home, writ notes upon Homer and Plautus, and fometimes thought it hard to be called to pray by any poor body, when he was just in the midst of one of Homer's battles. This was his polite, or I may rather fay; poor ignorant turn of mind, before devotion had got the government of his heart. But now his days are fo far from being tedious, or his parish too great a retirement, that he now only wants more time to do that variety of good which his foul thirsts after. The folitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven. He can now not only converse with, but gladly attend and wait upon, the poorest kind of people. He is now daily watching over the weak and infirm, humbling himfelf to perverse, rude, ignorant people wherever he can find them; and is fo far from defiring to be confidered as a gentleman, that he defires to be used as the servant of all; and in the spirit of his Lord and Master girds himfelf, and is glad to kneel down and wash any of their feet. He now thinks the poorest creature in his parish good enough, and great enough, to deferve the humbleft attendances, the kindest friendships, the tenderest offices, he can possibly shew them. He is so far now from wanting agreeable company, that he thinks there is no better converfation in the world, than to be talking with poor and mean people about the kingdom of heaven. All these noble thoughts and divine sentiments are the effects of his great devotion; he prefents every one so often before God in his prayers, that he never thinks he can efteem, reverence, or ferve those enough, for whom he implores fo many mercies from God.

the arts of holy living, and afpire after every inflance of piety and righteoufness, that his prayers for his flock may have their full force, and avail much with God. For this reason he has fold a small estate that he had, and has erected a charitable retirement for ancient, poor people to live in prayer and piety, that his prayers being assisted by such good works, may pierce the clouds, and bring down bleslings upon those souls committed to his care.

Ouranius reads how God himself said unto Abimelech concerning Abraham, He is a prophet: he shall pray for thee, and theu shall live. Gen. xx. 7. And again, how he said of Job: And my servant Job shall pray for you;

for him will I except, Job xlii. 8.

From these passages, Ouranius justly concludes, that the prayers of men eminent for holiness of life, have an extraordinary power with God; that he grants to other people such pardons, reliefs and blessings, through their prayers, as would not be granted to men of lets piety and perfection. This make Ouranius exceeding studious of Christian perfection, fearching after every grace and holy temper, purifying his heart all manner of ways, fearful of every error and defect in his life, less his prayers for his slock should be less availing with God, through his own defects in holiness.

This makes him careful of every temper of his heart, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness and humility, that he may be in some degree like an Abraham, or a Job, in his parish, and make such prayers for them, as God will hear and accept.

These are the happy effects, which a devout intercession hath produced in the life of Ouranius. And is other people in their several stations, were to imitate this example, in such a manner as suited their particular state of life, they would certainly find the same happy effects from it.

If Masters, for instance, were thus to remember their fervants in their prayers, befeeching God to bless them, and suiting their petitions to the particular wants and necessities of their fervants; letting no day pass, without a full performance of this part of devotion; the benefit would be as great to themselves, as to their servants. No way fo likely as this, to inspire them with a true fense of that power which they have in their hands, to make them delight in doing good, and becoming exemplary in all the parts of a wife and good master. presenting their servants so often before God, as equally related to God, and entitled to the fame expectations of heaven, as themselves, would naturally incline them to treat them, not only with fuch humanity, as become fellow-creatures, but with fuch tenderness, care, and generofity, as became fellow-heirs of the fame glory. This devotion would make mafters inclined to every thing that was good towards their fervants; be watchful of their behaviour, and as ready to require of them an exact observance of the duties of christianity, as of the duties of their fervants. This would teach them to confider their fervants as God's fervants, to defire their perfection, to do nothing before them that might corrupt their minds, to impose no business upon them that should lessen their sense of religion, or hinder them from their full fhare of devotion, both public and private. This praying for them, would make them as glad to fee their fervants eminent in piety as themselves, and contrive that they should have all the opportunities and encouragements, both to know and perform all the duties of the christian life. How natural would it be for such a mafter, to perform every part of family-devotion; to have conftant prayers; to excuse no one's absence from them; to have the Scriptures, and books of piety, often read amongst his servants; to take all opportunities of instructing them, of raising their minds to God, and teaching them to do all their business, as a service to God, and upon the hopes and expectations of another life? How natural would it be for fuch a one to pity their weakness and ignorance, to bear with the dulness of their understandings, or the perverseness of their tempers; to reprove them with tenderness, exhort them with affection, as hoping that God would hear his prayers for them? How impossible would it be for a master, that thus interceeded with God for his fervants, to use any unkind threatnings nings towards them, to damn and curse them as dogs and scoundrels, and treat them only as the dregs of the creation. This devotion would give them another spirit, and make them consider how to make proper returns of care, kindness and protection to those, who had spent their strength and time in service and attendance upon them.

Now if gentlemen think it so low an employment for their state and dignity, to exercise such a devotion as this for their servants, let them consider how far they are from the spirit of Christ, who made himself not only an intercessor, but a facrisce for the whole race of sinful mankind.

Let them consider how miserable their greatness would be, if the Son of God should think it as much below him to pray for them, as they do to pray for their fellow-creatures. Let them consider how far they are from that spirit, which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves.

Again; if parents should thus make themselves advocates and intercessors with God for their children, constantly applying to heaven in behalf of them, nothing would be more likely, not only to bless their children, but also to form and dispose their own minds to the performance of every thing that was excellent and praiseworthy. I do not suppose, but that the generality of parents remember their children in their prayers, and call upon God to bless them. But the thing here intended, is not a general remembrance of them, but a regular method of recommending all their particular needs and necessities unto God; and of praying for every such particular grace and virtue for them, as their state and condition of life shall seem to require.

The flate of parents is a holy state, in some degree like that of the priesthood, and calls upon them to bless their children with their prayers and facrifices to God. Thus it was that holy Job watched over, and blessed his children, he fanctified them, he rose up early in the morning and offered burnt-offerings, according to the number of them all, Job i. 5.

If parents therefore, confidering themselves in this light, fhould be daily calling upon God in a folemn, deliberate manner, altering and extending their interceffions, as the state and growth of their children required, fuch devotion would have a mighty influence upon the rest of their lives; it would make them very circumspect in the government of themselves; prudent and careful of every thing they faid or did, left their example should hinder that, which they fo constantly defired in their prayers. If a father was daily making particular prayers to God, that he would please to inspire his children with true piety, great humility, and strict temperance, what could be more likely to make the father himself become exemplary in these virtues? How naturally would he grow ashamed of wanting such virtues, as he thought necessary for his children? So that his prayers for their piety, would be a certain means of exalting his own to its greatest height.

If a father thus confidered himself as an intercessor with God for his children, to bless them with his prayers, what more likely means to make him aspire after every degree of holiness that he might thereby be fitter to obtain blessings from heaven for them? How would such thoughts make him avoid every thing that was sinful and displeasing to God, lest when he prayed for his children, God should reject his prayers? How tenderly, how religiously, would such a father converse with his children, whom he considered as his little spiritual slock, whose virtues he was to form by his example, encourage by his authority, nourish by his counsel, and

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune, of bringing them up in pride and indulgence, or of making them too fond of the world, lest he should thereby render them incapable of those graces which he was so often beseeching God to grant them.

These being the plain, natural, happy effects of this intercession, all parents, I hope, who have the real welfare of their children at heart, who desire to be their true friends and benefactors, and to live amongst them in the spirit of wisdom and piety, will not neglect so great a means

means, both of raising their own virtue, and doing an eternal good to those, who are so near and dear to them, by the strongest ties of nature.

Laftly, If all people, when they feel the first approaches of refentment, envy, or contempt, towards others; or if in all little difagreements, and mifunderstandings whatever, they should, instead of indulging their minds with little low reflections, have recourse at such times to a more particular and extraordinary intercession with God, for fuch persons as had raised their envy, resentment, or discontent; this would be a certain way to prevent the growth of all uncharitable tempers. If you was also to form your prayer, or intercession at that time, to the greatest degree of contrariety to that temper which you was then in, it would be an excellent means of raifing your heart to the greatest state of perfection. As for instance: when at any time you find in your heart motions of envy towards any person, whether on account of his riches, power, reputation, learning, or advancement, if you should immediately betake yourself at that time to your prayers, and pray to God to bless and profper him in that very thing, which raifed your envy; if you should express and repeat your petitions in the strongest terms, befeeching God to grant him all the happiness from the enjoyment of it, that can possibly be received, you would foon find it to be the best antidote in the world, to expel the venom of that poisonous passion. This would be fuch a triumph over yourfelf, would fo humble and reduce your heart into obedience and order, that the devil would even be afraid of tempting you again in the fame manner, when he faw the temptation turned into fo great a means of amending and reforming the state of your heart.

Again; If in any little difference or mifunderstandings that you happened to have at any time with a relation, a neighbour, or any one else, you should then pray for them in a more extraordinary manner, than you ever did before, beseeching God to give them every grace, and blessing, and happiness you can think of, you would have taken the speediest method that can be, of reconciling all differences, and clearing up all misunderstandings. You would then think nothing too great to be forgiven, stay for no condescensions, need no mediation of a third person, but be glad to testify your love and good will to him, who had so high a place in your secret prayers. This would be the mighty power of such Christian devotion; it would remove all peevish passions, soften your heart into the most tender condescensions, and be the best arbitrator of all differences that happened between you and any of your acquaintance.

The greatest resentments amongst friends and neighbours most often arise from poor punctillio's and little mistakes in conduct. A certain sign that their friendship is merely human, not founded upon religious co siderations, or supported by such a course of mutual prayer for one another, as the first Christians used. For such devotion must necessarily either destroy such tempers, or be itself destroyed by them. You cannot possibly have any ill temper, or shew any unkind behaviour to a man for whose welfare you are so much concerned, as to be

. Hence we may learn the odious nature and exceeding guilt of spite, hatred, contempt, and angry passions; they are not to be confidered as defects in good nature and fweetness of temper, not as failings in civility of manners or good breeding, but as fuch base tempers, as are entirely inconfiftent with the charity of intercession. You think it a small matter to be peevish or ill-natured to fuch or fuch a man; but you should confider, whether it be a fmall matter to do that, which you could not do, if you had but fo much charity as to be able to recommend him to God in your prayers. You think it a small matter to ridicule one man, and despise another; but you should consider, whether it be a small matter to want that charity towards these people, which christians are not allowed to want towards their most inveterate enemies. For be but as charitable to thefe men, do but blefs and pray for them, as you are obliged to bless and pray for your enemies, and then you will find that you have charity enough, to make it impossible for you to treat them with any degree of fcorn or contempt. For you cannot possibly despise and ridicule

that man whom your private prayers recommend to the love and favour of God.

When you despise and ridicule a man, it is with no other end but to make him ridiculous and contemptible in the eyes of other men, and in order to prevent their esteem of him. How therefore can it be possible for you sincerely to be seech God to bless that man with the honour of his love and favour, whom you desire men to

Could you out of love to a neighbour, defire your prince to honour him with every mark of esteem and favour, and yet at the same time expose him to the scorn and derision of your own servants? Yet this is as possible, as to expose that man to the scorn and contempt of your fellow-creatures, whom you recommend to the savour of God in your fecret prayers.

From these considerations we may plainly discover the reasonableness and justice of this doctrine of the Gospel, Whosever shall say unto his brother, Racha, shall be in danger, of the council; but whosever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell sire, Matt. v. 22. We are not, I suppose, to believe that every hasty word, or unreasonable expression that slips from us by chance, or surprize, and is contrary to our intention and tempers, is the great sin here signified. But he that says, Racha, or Thou sool, must chiesly mean him that allows himself in deliberate, designed acts of scorn and contempt towards his brother, and in that temper speaks to him, and of him, in reproachful language.

Now fince it appears, that these tempers are at the bottom the most rank uncharitableness, since no one can be guilty of them, but because he has not charity enough to pray to God for his brother; it cannot be thought hard or rigorous justice, that such tempers should endanger the salvation of Christians. For who would think it hard, that a Christian cannot obtain the savour of God for himself, unless he reverence and esteem his brother Christian, as one that bears the image of God, as one for whom Christ died, as a member of Christ's body, as a member of that holy society on earth, which is in union with that triumphant church in heaven? Yet all these considerations must be forgot, all these glorious privileges difregarded, before man can treat him that has them, as an object of fcorn and contempt. So that to fcorn or defpife a brother, or, as our bleffed Lord fays to call him Racha or Fool, must be looked upon, as amongst the most odious, unjust, and guilty tempers, that can be supported in the heart of a Christian, and justly excluding him from all his hopes in the falvation of Jefus Christ. For to despife one for whom Christ died, is to be as contrary to Christ, as he that despifes any thing that Christ has faid, or done.

If a Christian that had lived with the holy Virgin Mary, should, after the death of our Lord, have taken any occasion to treat her with contempt, you would certainly fay, that he had lost his piety towards our blessed Lord. For a true reverence for Christ must have forced him to treat her with respect, who was so nearly related

I dare appeal to any man's mind, whether it does not tell him, that this relation of the Virgin Mary to our bleffed Lord, must have obliged all those that lived and conversed with her, to treat her with great respect and esteem. Might not a man have justly dreaded the vengeance of God upon him, for any scorn and contempt that he had shewn to her?

Now if this be plain and obvious reasoning, if a contempt offered to the Virgin Mary must have been interpreted a contempt of Christ, because of her near relation to him; then let the same reason shew you the great implety of despising any brother. You cannot despise a brother, without despising him that stands in a high relation to God, to his Son Jesus Christ, and to the Holy Trinity.

You would certainly think it a mighty impiety to treat a writing with great contempt, that had been written by the finger of God; and can you think it a lefs impiety to contemn and villify a brother, who is not only the workmanship, but the image of God? You would justly think it great prophaneness to contemn and trample upon an Altar, because it was appropriated to holy uses, and had had the body of Christ so often placed upon it; and can you suppose it to be less prophaneness to scorn and trample upon a brother, who so belongs to God, that his very body body is to be confidered as the temple of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. vi. 15.

Had you despifed and ill-treated the Virgin Mary, you had been chargeable with the impiety of despising her, of whom Christ was born. And if you scorn and despise a brother you are chargeable with the impiety of despising him, for whom Christ laid down his life. And now if this scornful temper is founded upon a difregard of all these relations, which every Christian bears to God, and Christ, and the Holy Trinity, can you wonder, or think it hard, that a Christian who thus allows himself to despise a brother should be in danger of hell fire?

Secondly, It must here be observed, that though in these words, Whosoever shall say, Thou sool, &c. the great sin there contemned is an allowed temper of despising a brother; yet we are also to believe, that all hasty expressions, and words of contempt, though spoken by surprize or accident, are by this text condemned as great sins, and notorious breaches of Christians.

They proceed from great want of Christian love and meekness, and call for great repentance. They are only little fins, when compared with habits and fettled tempers of treating a brother despitefully, and fall as directly under the condemnation of this text, as the grossest, habits of uncharitableness. And the reason why we are always to apprehend great guilt, and call ourselves to a strict repentance for these hasty expressions of anger and contempt, is this; because they seldom are what they seem to be, that is, mere starts of temper, that are occasioned purely by surprize or accident; but are much more our own proper acts, than we generally imagine.

A man fays a great many bitter things; he presently forgives himself, because he supposes it was only the suddenness of the occasion, or something accidental, that carried him so far beyond himself. But he should consider, that perhaps the accident, or surprize, was not the occasion of his angry expressions, but might only be the occasion of his angry temper shewing itself. Now as this is, generally speaking, the case, as all haughty, angry language generally proceeds from some secret habits of pride in the heart; fo people that are fubject to it, though only now and then as accidents happen, have great reason to repent of more than their present behaviour, to charge themselves with greater guilt than accidental passion, and to bring themselves to such penance and mortification, as is proper to destroy habits of a haughty spirit. And this may be the reason, why the text looks no farther than the outward language; why it only says; Whosever shall say, Thou sool; because sew can proceed so far, as to the accidental use of haughty, distainful language, but they whose hearts are more or less possessed with habits and settled tempers of pride and haughtiness.

But to return: Intercession is not only the best arbitrator of all differences, the best promoter of true friendship, the best cure and preservative against all unkind tempers, all angry and haughty passions, but is also of great use to discover to us the true state of our own hearts.

There are many tempers which we think lawful and innocent which we never fuspect of any harm; which, if they were to be tried by this devotion, would soon shew us how we have deceived ourselves.

Sufurrus is a pious, temperate, good man, remarkable for abundance of excellent qualities. No one more constant at the service of the Church, or whose heart is more affected with it. His charity is fo great, that he almost starves himself, to be able to give greater alms to the poor. Yet Susurrus had a prodigious failing along with these great virtues. He had a mighty inclination to hear and discover all the defects and infirmities of all about him. You was welcome to tell him any thing of any body, provided that you did not do it in the stile of an enemy. He never diffiked an evil fpeaker, but when his language was rough and passionate. If you would but whisper any thing gently, though it was ever so bad in itself, Susurrus was ready to receive it. When he visits, you generally hear him relating how forry he is for the defects and failings of fuch a neighbour. He is always letting you know how tender he is of the reputation of his neighbour; how loth to fay that which he is forced to fay; and how gladly he would conceal it, if it could be concealed.

Sufurrus had fuch a tender, compaffionate manner of relating things the most prejudicial to his neighbour, that he even seemed, both to himself and others, to be exercising a Christian charity, at the same time that he was indulging a whispering, evil speaking temper.

Sufurrus once whispered to a particular friend in great fecrecy, something too bad to be spoke of publickly. He ended with saying, how glad he was, that it had not yet took wind, and that he had some hopes it might not be true, though the suspicions were strong. His friend made him this reply: You say, Susurrus, that you are glad it has not yet taken wind: and that you have some hopes it may not prove true. Go home therefore to your closet, and pray to God for this man, in such a manner, and with such earnestness as you would pray for your-

Befeech God to interpose in his favour, to save him from false accusers, and bring all those to shame, who by uncharitable whispers and secret stories, wound him, like those that stab in the dark. And when you have made this prayer, then you may, if you please, go tell the same secret to some other friend, that you have told to me.

Sufurrus was exceedingly affected with this rebuke, and felt the force of it upon his conscience in as lively a manner, as if he had feen the books opened at the day of judgment. All other arguments might have been refilled; but it was impossible for Susurrus either to reject, or to follow this advice, without being equally felf-condemned in the highest degree. From that time to this, he has constantly used himself to this method of intercession; and his heart is so entirely changed by it, that he can now no more privately whifper any thing to the prejudice of another, than he can openly pray to God to do people hurt. Whisperings and evil-speakings now hurt his ears, like oaths and curfes; and he has appointed one day in the week, to be a day of penance as long as he lives, to humble himfelf before God, in the forrowful confession of his former guilt. It may well be wondered how a man of fo much piety as Sufurrus could be fo long deceived in himfelf, as to live in fuch a flate of fcandal and evil fpeaking, without fufpecting himfelf to be guilty of it. But it was the tenderness and feeming compassion with which he heard and related every thing, that deceived both himfelf and others. This was a falseness of heart, which was only to be fully discovered, by the true charity of intercession. And if people of virtue, who think little harm of themselves, as Susfurrus did, were often to try their spirit by such an intercession, they would often find themselves to be such, as they least of all suspected.

I have laid before you, the many and great advantages of intercession. You have seen what a divine friendship it must needs beget amongst Christians; how dear it would render all relations and neighbours to one another; how it tends to make Clergymen, Masters, and Parents, exemplary and perfect in all the duties of their station; how certainly it destroys all envy, spite, and ill-natured passions; how speedily it reconciles all differences, and with what a piercing light it discovers to a man the true

These considerations will, I hope, persuade you to make such intercession as is proper for your state, the constant, chief matter of your devotion at this hour of prayer.

CHAP. XXII.

Recommending Devotion at three o'clock, called in Scripture the ninth hour of the day. The fubject of prayer at this hour is Refignation to the divine pleasure. The nature and duty of conformity to the will of God in all our actions and designs.

I HAVE recommended certain subjects to be made the fixed and chief matter of your devotions, at all the hours of prayer that have been already considered. As thanksgiving, and oblation of yourself to God, at your first prayers in the morning; at nine, the great virtue of Christian humility is to be the chief part of your petitions; at twelve, you are called upon to pray for all the graces of univerfal love, and to raife it in your heart by fuch general and particular interceffions, as your own ftate, and relation to other people, feem more particularly to require of you. At this hour of the afternoon, you are defired to confider the necessity of refignation and conformity to the will of God, and to make this great virtue the principal matter of your prayers.

There is nothing wife, or holy, or just, but the great will of God. This is as strictly true in the most rigid sense, as to say, that nothing is infinite and eternal but God. No beings therefore, whether in heaven or on earth, can be wife, or holy, or just, but so far as they conform to this will of God. It is conformity to this will, that gives virtue and perfection to the highest services of angels in heaven; and it is conformity to the same will that makes the ordinary actions of men on earth become an acceptable fervice unto God.

The whole nature of virtue confifts in conforming, and the whole nature of vice in declining from the will of God. All God's creatures are created to fulfil his will; the Sun and Moon obey his will, by the necessity of their nature: Angels conform to his will by the perfection of their nature. If therefore you would shew yourfelf not to be a rebel and apostate from the order of the creation, you must act like beings both above and below you; it must be the great defire of your foul, that God's will may be done by you on earth, as it is done in heaven. It must be the settled purpose and intention of your heart, to will nothing, defign nothing, do nothing, but so far as you have reason to believe, that it is the will of God, that you should so defire, defign, and do. It is as just and necessary to live in this state of heart, to think thus of God and yourfelf, as to think that you have any dependence upon him. And it is as great a rebellion against God, to think that your will may ever differ from his, as to think that you have not received the power of willing from him. You are therefore to confider yourfelf as a being, that has no other business in the world, but to be that which God requires you to be; to have no tempers, no rules of your own, to feek no felf-defigns or felf-ends, but to fill fome place, and act fome part in strict conformity, and thankful refignation to the divine pleasure. To think that you are your own, or at your own disposal, is as absurd as to think that you created, and can preserve yourself. It is as plain and necessary a first principle, to believe you are thus God's, that you thus belong to him, and are to act and suffer all in a thankful resignation to his pleasure, as to believe, that in him you live, and move, and have your being.

Refignation to the divine will, fignifies a chearful approbation and thankful acceptance of every thing that comes from God. It is not enough patiently to fubmit, but we must thankfully receive, and fully approve of every thing, that by the order of God's providence happens to us. For there is no reason why we should be patient, but what is as good and ftrong a reason why we should be thankful. If we were under the hands of a wife and good physician, that could not mistake, or do any thing to us, but what certainly tended to our benefit; it would not be enough to be patient, and abstain from murmuring against such a physician; but it would be as great a breach of duty and gratitude to him, not to be pleased and thankful for what he did, as it would be to murmur at him. Now this is our true state with relation to God; we cannot be faid fo much as to believe in him, unless we believe him to be of infinite wifdom. Every argument therefore for patience under his disposal of us, is as strong an argument for approbation and thankfulness for every thing that he does to us. And there needs no more to dispose us to this gratitude towards God, than a full belief in him, that he is this being of infinite wisdom, love, and goodness. Do but asfent to this truth, in the fame manner as you affent to things of which you have no doubt, and then you will chearfully approve of every thing, that God has already approved for you. For as you cannot possibly be pleafed with the behaviour of any perfon towards you, but because it is for your good, is wise in itself, and the effect of his love and goodness towards you; so when you are fatisfied that God does not only do that which is wife, and good, and kind, but that which is the effect of an infinite wifdom and love in the care of you; it will be as necessary, whilst you have this faith, to be thankful and be pleafed with every thing which God chuses for you, as to wish your own happiness. Whenever therefore you find yourself disposed to uneasiness, or murmuring at any thing, that is the effect of God's providence over you, you must look upon yourself as denying either the wisdom or goodness of God. For every complaint necessarily supposes this. You would never complain of your neighbour, but that you suppose you can show either his unwise, unjust, or unkind behaviour towards you. Now every murmuring, impatient resection under the providence of God, is the same accusation of God. A complaint always supposes ill usage.

Hence also you may see the great necessity and piety of this thankful state of heart, because the want of it implies an accusation of God's want either of wisdom, or goodness, in his disposal of us. It is not therefore any high degree of perfection, founded in any uncommon nicety of thinking, or refined notions, but a plain principle, founded in this plain belief, that God is a being of infinite wisdom and goodness. Now this resignation to the divine will, may be considered in two respects; First, As it signifies a thankful approbation of God's general providence over the world: Secondly, As it signifies a thankful acceptance of his particular providence over us.

First, Every man is by the law of his creation, by the first article of his creed, obliged to confent to, and acknowledge the wildom and goodness of God, in his general providence over the whole world. He is to believe that it is the effect of God's great wisdom and goodness, that the world itself was formed at such a particular time, and in fuch a manner. That the general order of nature, the whole frame of things, is contrived and formed in the best manner. He is to believe that God's providence over states and kingdoms, times and seasons, is all for the best. That the revolutions of state, and changes of empire, the rife and fall of monarchies, perfecutions, wars, famines and plagues, are all permitted, and conducted by God's providence, to the general good of man in this state of trial. A good man is to believe all this, with the same fulness of affent, as he believes that God is in every place, though he neither fees, nor can comprehend the manner of his presence. This is a noble noble magnificence of thought, a true religious greatness of mind, to be thus affected with God's general providence, admiring and magnifying his wisdominallthings; never murmuring at the course of the world, or the state of things, but looking upon all around, at heaven and earth, as a pleased spectator; and adoring that invisible hand, which gives laws to all motions, and over-rules all events to ends suitable to the highest wisdom and goodness.

It is very common for people to allow themselves great liberty in finding fault with fuch things, as have only God for their cause. Every one thinks he may justly fay, what a wretched, abominable climate he lives in. This man is frequently telling you, what a difmal, curfed day it is, and what intolerable feafons we have. Another thinks he has very little to thank God for, that it is hardly worth his while to live in a world fo full of changes and revolutions. But these are tempers of great impiety, and shew that religion has not yet its feat in the heart of those that have them. It sounds indeed much better to murmur at the course of the world, or the state of things, than to murmur at providence: to complain of the feafons and weather, than to complain of God; but if these have no other cause but God and his providence, it is a poor distinction to fay, that you are only angry at the things, but not at the cause and director of them.

How facred the whole frame of the world is, how all things are to be confidered as God's and referred to him, is fully taught by our bleffed Lordin the case of oaths: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black; Mat. v. 37. that is, because the whiteness or blackness of thy hair is not thine, but God's.

Here you fee all things in the whole order of nature, from the highest heavens to the smallest hair, are always to be considered, not separately as they are in themselves, but as in some relation to God. And if this be good reasoning, thou shalt not swear by the earth, a city, or thy hair, hair, because these things are Gods, and in a certain manner belong to him; is it not exactly the same reasoning to say, Thou shalt not murmur at the seasons of the earth, the states of cities, and the change of times, because all these things are in the hands of God, have him for their Author, are directed and governed by him to such ends, as are most suitable to his wise-providence?

If you think you can murmur at the state of things without murmuring at Providence, or complain of feafons without complaining of God; hear what our bleffed Lord fays farther upon oaths; Whoso shall swear by the altar, swearsth by it, and by all things thereon: and whoso shall swear by the temple, swearsth by him that dwelleth therein: and he that shall favear by heaven, saveareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon, Matt. xxiii. 20. Now does not this Scripture plainly oblige us to reason after this manner: Whoso murmurs at the course of the world, murmurs at God that governs the course of the world. Whofo repines at feafons and weather, and speaks impatiently of times and events, repines and speaketh impatiently of God, who is the sole Lord and Governor of times, feafons and events. As therefore when we think of God himfelf, we are to have no fentiments but of praife and thankfgiving; fo when we look at those things which are under the direction of God, and governed by his Providence, we are to receive them with the same tempers of praise and gratitude. And though we are not to think all things right, and just, and lawful, which the providence of God permits; for then nothing could be unjust, because nothing without his permission; yet we must adore God in the greatest public calamities, the most grievous persecutions, as things that are fuffered by God, like plagues and famines, for ends fuitable to his wifdom and glory in the government of the world.

There is nothing more fuitable to the piety of a reafonable creature, or the spirit of a christian, than thus to approve, admire, and glorify God in all the acts of his general providence: considering the whole world as his particular family, and all events as directed by his wisdom.

Every one feems to confent to this, as an undeniable truth, That all things must be as God pleases; and is not this enough to make every man pleased with them himfelf? And how can a man be a peevish complainer of any thing that is the effect of providence but by shewing that his own felf-will and self-wisdom is of more weight with him, than the will and wisdom of God? And what can religion be said to have done for a man, whose heart is in this state?

For if he cannot thank and praise God, as well in calamities and sufferings, as in prosperity and happiness, he is as far from the piety of a christian, as he that only loves them that loves him, is from the charity of a christian. For to thank God only for such things as you like, is no more a proper act of piety, than to believe only what you fee, is an act of faith.

Refignation and thankfgiving to God are only acts of piety, when they are acts of faith, trust, and confidence in the divine goodness. The faith of Abraham was an act of true piety, because it stopped at no difficulties, was not altered or leffened by any human appearances. It first of all carried him, against all shew of happiness, from his own kindred and country, into a strange land, not knowing whether he went. It afterwards made him against all appearance of nature, when his body was dead, when he was about an hundred years old, depend upon the promife of God being fully perfuaded that what God, had promifed, he was able to perform. It was this fame faith, that against so many pleas of nature, so many appearances of reason, prevailed upon him to offer up Isaacaccounting that God was able to raife him up from the dead. Heb. xi. 17, 19. Now this faith is the true pattern of Christian relignation to the divine pleasure; you are to thank and praise God, not only for things agreeable to you, that have the appearance of happiness and comfort; but when you are, like Abraham, called from all appearance of comfort, to be a pilgrim in a strange land, to part with an only son; being as fully persuaded of the divine goodness in all things that happen to you, as Abraham was of the divine promise, when there was the least appearance of its being performed.

This is true Christian refignation to God, which requires no more to the support of it, than such a plain as-

furance of the goodness of God, as Abraham had of his veracity. And if you ask yourself, what greater reason Abraham had to depend upon the divine veracity, than you have to depend upon the divine goodness, you will find that none can be given. You cannot therefore look upon this as an unnecessary, high pitch of perfection, since the want of it implies the want, not of any high notions, but of a plain and ordinary faith in the most certain doctrines both of natural and revealed religion.

Thus much concerning refignation to the divine will, as it fignifies a thankful approbation of God's general providence; it is now to be confidered, as it fignifies a thankful acceptance of God's particular providence over us.

Every man is to confider himself as a particular object of God's providence; under the fame care and protection of God, as if the world had been made for him alone. It is not by chance that any man is born at fuch a time, of fuch parents, and in fuch place and condition. certain, that every foul comes into the body at fuch a time, and in fuch circumftances, by the express defignment of God, according to some purposes of his will, and for some particular ends; this is as certain, as that it is by the express designment of God, that some beings are angels and others are men. It is as much by the counfel and eternal purpose of God, that you should be born in your particular state, and that Isaac should be the fon of Abraham, as that Gabriel should be an angel, and Isaac a man. The scripture assure us, that it was by divine appointment, that our bleffed Saviour was born at Bethlehem, and at fuch a time. Now although it was owing to the dignity of his person and the great importance of his birth, that thus much of the divine counsel was declared to the world concerning the time and manner of it; yet we are as fure from the fame fcriptures, that the time and manner of every man's coming into the world, is according to some eternal purposes and direction of divine providence, and in fuch time and place, and circumstances, as are directed and governed by God for particular ends of his wisdom and goodness, This we are as certain of from plain revelation, as we can can be of any thing. For if we are told, that not a fparrow falleth to the ground without our heavenly Father; can any thing more firongly teach us, that much greater beings, fuch as human fouls, come not into the world without the care and direction of our heavenly Father? If it is faid, the very hairs of your head are all numbered; is it not to teach us, that nothing, not the smallest things imaginable, happen to us by chance? But if the smallest things we can conceive, are declared to be under the divine direction, need we, or can we be more plainly taught, that the greatest things of life, such as the manner of our coming into the world, our parents, the time, and other circumstances of our birth and condition, are all according to the eternal purposes, direction and appointment of divine providence?

When the disciples put this question to our blessed Lord, concerning the blind man, faying, Master, who did fin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? He that was the eternal wisdom of God made this answer, Neither hath this man finned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him, John ix, 2, 3. Plainly declaring, that the particular circumstances of every man's birth, the body that he receives, and the condition and flate of life into which he is born, are appointed by a fecret providence, which directs all things to their particular times and feafons, and manner of existence, that the wildom and works of God may be made manifest in them all. As therefore it is thus certain, that we are what we are, as to birth, time, and condition of entering into the world; fince all that is particular in our flate, is the effect of God's particular providence over us, and intended for fome particular ends both of his glory, and our own happiness, we are, by the greatest obligations of gratitude called upon to conform and refign our will to the will of God in all these respects; thankfully approving and accepting every thing that is particular in our flate. Praising and glorifying his name for our birth of fuch parents, and in fuch circumftances of state and condition; being fully affured, that it was for some reasons of infinite wisdom and goodness, that we were so born into such particular states of life. the man above-mentioned, was born blind, that the works works of God might be manifested in him, had he not great reason to praise God, for appointing him in such a particular manner, to be the instrument of his glory? And if one person is born here, and another there; if one falls amongst riches, and another into poverty; if one receives his sless and blood from these parents, and another from those, for as particular ends, as the man was born blind; have not all people the greatest reason to bless God, and to be thankful for their particular state and condition, because all that is particular in it, is as directly intended for the glory of God, and their own good, as the particular blindness of that man, who was so born, that the works of God might be manifested in him?

How noble an idea does this give us of the divine Omnifcience prefiding over the whole world, and governing fuch a long chain and combination of feeming accidents and chances, to the common and particular advantages of all beings? So that all perfons, in fuch a wonderful variety of causes, accidents and events, should all fall into fuch particular states, as were foreseen, and foreordained to their best advantage, and so as to be most ferviceable to the wife and glorious ends of God's go-

Had you been any thing elfe than what you are, you had, all things confidered, been lefs wifely provided for than you are now; you had wanted fome circumstances and conditions, that are best fitted to make you happy yourfelf, and ferviceable to the glory of God. Could you fee all that which God fees, all that happy chain of caufes and motives which are to move and invite you to a right course of life, you would see something to make you like that state you are in, as fitter for you than any other. But as you cannot fee this, fo it is here that your Chriftian faith and trust in God, is to exercise itself, and render you as grateful and thankful for the happiness of your state, as if you saw every thing that contributes to it with your own eyes. But now if this is the case of every man in the world, thus bleffed with fome particular state that is most convenient for him, how reasonable is it for every man to will that which God has already willed for him? And by a pious faith and trust in the divine Goodness, thankfully adore and magnify that wife providence, which he is fure has made the best choice for him of those things, which he could not chuse for himself.

Every uneafiness at our own state, is founded upon comparing it with that of other people. Which is full as unreasonable, as if a man in a dropsy should be angry at those that prescribe different things to him, from those which are prescribed to people in health. For all the different states of life are like the different states of diseases, what is a remedy to one man in his state, may be poison to another. So that to murmur because you are not as fome others are, is as if a man in one difeafe should murmur that he is not treated like him that is in another. Whereas if he was to have his will, he would be killed by that, which will prove the cure of another. It is just thus in the various conditions of life; if you give yourfelf up to uneafinefs, or complain at any thing in your state, you may, for aught you know, be so ungrateful to God, as to murmur at that very thing, which is to prove the cause of your salvation. Had you it in your power to get that which you think it so grievous to want, it might perhaps be that very thing, which of all others would most expose you to eternal damnation. So that whether we confider the infinite goodness of God, that cannot chuse amiss for us, or our own great ignorance of what is most advantageous to us, there can be nothing fo reasonable and pious, as to have no will but that of God's, and defire nothing for ourfeleves, in our perfons, our state, and condition, but that which the good providence of God appoints us. Farther, as the good providence of God thus introduces us into the world, into fuch states and conditions of life, as are most convenient for us, fo the fame unerring wisdom orders all events, and changes in the whole course of our lives, in such a manner, as to render them the fittest means to exercise and improve our virtue. Nothing hurts us, nothings destroys us, but the ill use of that liberty, with which God has entrusted us.

We are as fure that nothing happens to us by chance, as that the world itself was not made by chance, we are as certain that all things happen and work together for our good, as that God is goodness itself. So that a man has as much reason to will every thing that happens to him, because God wills it, as to think that is wisest, which is directed by infinite wifdom. This is not cheating or foothing ourselves into any false content, or imaginary happiness; but is a satisfaction grounded upon as great a certainty, as the being and attributes of God. For if we are right in believing God to act over us with infinite wisdom and goodness, we cannot carry our notions, conformity and refignation to the divine will too high; nor can we ever be deceived, by thinking that to be belt for us, which God has brought upon us. For the providence of God is not more concerned in the government of night and day, and the variety of feafons, than in the common course of events, that seem most to depend upon the mere wills of men. So that it is as strictly right, to look upon all worldly accidents and changes, all the various turns and alterations in your own life, to be as truly the effects of Divine Providence, as the rifing and fetting of the fun, or the alterations of the feafons of the year. As you are therefore always to adore the wifdom of God in the direction of these things; so it is the same reasonable duty, always to magnify God, as an equal director of every thing that happens to you in the course of your own life. This holy refignation and conformity of your will to the will of God, being fo much the true state of piety, I hope you will think it proper to make this hour of prayer, a constant season of applying to God for fo great a gift. That by thus constantly praying for it, your heart may be habitually disposed towards it, and always in a state of readiness to look at every thing as God's, and to confider him in every thing; that fo every thing that befals you, may be received in the spirit of piety, and made a means of exercising some

There is nothing that so powerfully governs the heart, that so strongly excites us to wife and reasonable actions, as a true fense of God's presence.

But as we cannot fee, or apprehend the effence of God, so nothing will so constantly keep us under a lively fense of the presence of God, as this holy resignation, which attributes every thing to him, and receives every thing as from him.

O Could

Could we fee a miracle from God, how would our thoughts be affected with an holy awe and veneration of his presence! But if we consider every thing as God's doing, either by order or permission, we shall then be affected with common things, as they would be who faw a miracle. For as there is nothing to affect you in a miracle, but as it is the action of God, and bespeaks his prefence; fo when you confider God, as acting in all things, and all events, then all things will become venerable to you, like miracles, and fill you with the fame awful tentiments of the divine prefence. Now you must not referve the exercise of this pious temper, to any particular times or occasions, or fancy how resigned you will be to God, if fuch or fuch trials should happen. For this is amufing yourfelf with the notion or idea of refignation instead of the virtue itself. Do not therefore please yourself with thinking how piously you would act and submit to God, in a plague, a famine, or perfecution; but be intent upon the perfection of the prefent day; and be affured, that the best way of shewing a true zeal, is to make little things the occasions of great piety.

Begin therefore in the smallest matters, and most ordinary occasions, and accustom your mind to the daily exercise of this pious temper, in the lowest occurrences of life. And when a contempt, an affront, a little injury, loss, or disappointment, or the smallest events of every day, continually raise your mind to God in proper acts of resignation, then you may justly hope, that you shall be numbered amongst those that are resigned and thankful to God in the greatest trials and af-

CHAP. XXIII.

Of Evening prayer. Of the nature and necessity of examination. How we are to be particular in the confession of all our sins. Here we are to fill our minds with a just horror and dread of all sin.

AM now come to fix o'clock in the evening, which, according to the fcripture account, is called the twelfth, or last hour of the day. This is a time so proper for devotion, that I suppose nothing need be faid to recommend it as a season of prayer, to all people that profess any regard to piety. As the labour and action of every state of life is generally over at this hour, so this is the proper time for every one to call himself to account, and review all his behaviour, from the first action of the day. The necessity of this examination, is founded upon the necessity of repentance. For if it be necessary to repent of all our fins, if the guilt of unre-pented fins still continue upon us, then it is necessary not only that our fins, but the particular circumstances and aggravations of them, be known and recollected, and brought to repentance. The Scripture faith, If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, I John i. 9. Which is as much as to fay, that then only our fins are forgiven, and we cleanfed from the guilt and unrighte-ouiness of them, when they are thus confessed and repented of.

There feems therefore to be the greatest necessity, that all our daily actions be constantly observed, and brought to account, lest by a negligence, we load ourselves with the guilt of unrepented sins. This examination therefore of ourselves every evening, is not only to be considered as a commendable rule, and sit for a wife man to observe; but as something that is as necessary as a daily confession and repentance of our sins, because this daily repentance is of very little fignificancy, and lofes all its chief benefit, unlefs it be a particular confession and repentance of the fins of that day. This examination is necessary to repentance in the same manner as time is necessary; you cannot repent or express your forrow, unless you allow some time for it: nor can you repent, but so far as you know what it is that you are repenting of. So that when it is said, that it is necessary to examine and call your actions to account; it is only saying, that it is necessary to know what, and how many things you are to repent of.

You perhaps have hitherto only used yourself to confess yourself a sinner in general, and asked forgiveness in the gross, without any particular remembrance, or contrition for the particular fins of that day. And by this practice you are brought to believe, that the same short, general form of confession of sin in general, is a sufficient repentance for every day. Suppose another person should hold that a confession of our sins in general once at the end of every week was sufficient; and that it was as well to confess the fins of seven days altogether, as to have a particular repentance at the end of every day.

I know you fufficiently fee the unreasonableness and impiety of this opinion, and that you think it is eafy enough to shew the danger and folly of it. Yet you cannot bring one argument against such an opinion, but what will be as good an argument against such a daily repentance, as does not call the particular fins of that day to a strict account. For as you can bring no express text of scripture against such an opinion, but must take all your arguments from the nature of repentance, and the necessity of a particular repentance for particular fins; fo every argument of that kind must as fully prove the necessity of being very particular in our repentance of the fins of every day. Since nothing can be justly faid against leaving the sins of the whole week to be repented for in the gross, but what may as justly be faid against a daily repentance, which considers the sins of that day only in the gross.

Would you tell fuch a man, that a daily confession was necessary to keep up an abhorrence of fin, that the mind would grow hardened and senseless of the guilt of fin without it? And is not this as good a reason for requiring that your daily repentance be very express and particular for your daily sins? For if confession is to raise an abhorrence of sin, surely that confession which considers and lays open your particular sins, that brings them to light with all their circumstances and aggravations, that requires a particular forrowful acknowledgment of every sin, must in a much greater degree fill the mind with an abhorrence of sin, than that which only in one and the same form of words, confesses you only to be a sinner in general. For as this is nothing but what the greatest saint may justly say of himself, so the daily repeating of only such a confession, has nothing in it to make you truly ashamed of your own way of life.

Again: Must you not tell such a man, that by leaving himself to such a weekly, general consession, he would be in great danger of forgetting a great many of his sins? But is there any sense or force in this argument, unless you suppose that our sins are all to be remembered, and brought to a particular repentance? And is it not as necessary, that our particular sins be not forgotten, but particularly remembered in your daily, as in a repentance at any other time? So that every argument for a daily consession and repentance, is the same argument for the consession and repentance of the particular sins of every day. Because daily confession has no other reason or necessity, but our daily sins; and therefore is nothing of what it should be, but so far as it is repentance and forrowful acknowledgement of the sins of the day.

You would, I suppose, think yourself chargeable with great impiety, if you was to go to bed without confessing yourself to be a sinner, and asking pardon of God; you would not think it sufficient that you did so yesterday, and yet if without any regard to the present day, you only repeat the same form of words that you used yesterday, the sins of the present may justly be looked upon to have had no repentance. For if the sins of the present day require a new confession, it must be such a new confession as is proper to itself. For it is the state and condition of every day, that is to determine the state and manner of your repentance in the evening; otherwise the same general form of words is rather an empty formality, that has the appearance of a duty; than fuch a true performance of it, as is necessary to make it truly useful to you.

Let it be supposed, that on a certain day you have been guilty of these sins; that you have told a vain lye upon yourfelf, ascribing something falsely to yourself through pride; that you have been guilty of detraction, and indulged yourfelf in some degree of intemperance. be supposed, that on the next day you have lived in a contrary manner; that you have neglected no duty of devotion, and been the rest of the day innocently employed in your proper business. Let it be supposed, that on the evening of both these days you only use the same confession in general, considering it rather as a duty that is to be performed every night, than as a repentance that is to be fuited to the particular state of the day. Can it with any reason be said, that each day has had its proper repentance? Is it not as good fense to fay, there is no difference in the guilt of these days, as to say that there need be no different repentance at the end of them? Or how can each of them have its proper repentance, but by its having a repentance as large and extensive, and particular, as the guilt of each day?

Again: Let it be supposed, that in that day, when you had been guilty of the three notorious fins abovementioned, that in your evening repentance, you had only called one of them to mind: Is it not plain, that the other two are unrepented of, and that therefore their guilt still abides upon you? So that you are then in the Itate of him who commits himfelf to the night without the repentance for fuch a day, as had betrayed him into two fuch great fins. Now these are not needless particulars, or fuch ferupulous niceties, as a man need not trouble himself about; but are such plain truths, as effentially concern the very life of piety. For if repentance is necessary, it is full as necessary that it might be rightly performed, and in due manner. And I have entered into all these particulars, only to shew you in the plainest manner, that examination, and a careful review of all the actions of the day, is not only to be looked upon as a good rule, but as fomething as necessary as repentance itself.

If a man is to account for his expences at night, can it be thought a needless exactness in him, to take notice of every particular expence in the day? And if a man is to repent of his fins at night, can it be thought too great a piece of scrupulosity in him, to know and call to mind what fins he is to repent of?

Farther: Though it mould be granted, that a confession in general be a sufficient repentance for the end of such days, as have only the unavoidable frailties of our nature to lament; yet even this fully proves the absolute necessity of this self-examination: for without this examination, who can know that he has gone thro any day in this manner?

Again: An evening repentance, which thus brings all the actions of the day to account, is not only necelfary to wipe off the guilt of fin, but is also the most certain way to amend and perfect our lives. For it is only fuch a repentance as this, that touches the heart, awakens the confcience, and leaves an horror and deteftation of fin upon the mind. For instance: If it should happen that upon any particular evening, all that you could charge yourfelf with should be this, viz. a hasty, negligent performance of your devotions, or too much time ipent in an impertinent conversation; if the unreafonableness of these things were fully reslected upon, and acknowledged; if you was then to condemn yourfelf before God for them, and implore his pardon and affifting grace, what could be fo likely a means to prevent your falling into the fame faults the next day? Or if you should fall into them again the next day; yet if they were again brought to the same examination and condemnation in the presence of God, their happening again would be fuch a proof to you of your own folly and weakness, would cause such a pain and remorfe in your mind, and fill you with fuch shame and confusion at yourself, as would in all probability make you exceedingly defirous of greater perfection.

Now in the case of repeated fins, this would be the certain benefit that we should receive from this examination and confession; the mind would thereby be made humble, full of forrow and deep compunction, and by degrees forced into amendment.

Whereas a formal, general, confession, that is only considered as an evening duty, that overlooks the particular mistakes of the day, and is the same whether the day be spent ill or well, has little or no effect upon the mind; a man may use such a daily confession, and yet go on finning and confessing all his life, without any remorse of mind, or true desire of amendment. For if your own particular sins are left out of your confession, your confessing of sin in general has no more effect upon your mind, than if you had only confessed that all men in general are sinners. And there is nothing in any confession to shew that it is yours, but so far as it is a felf-accusation, not of sin in general, or such as is common to all others, but of such particular sins, as are your own proper shame and reproach.

No other confession, but such as thus discovers and accuses your own particular guilt, can be an act of true forrow or real concern at your own condition. And a confession that is without this forrow and compunction of heart has nothing in it, either to atone for past fins, or to produce in us any true reformation and amend-

To proceed; in order to make this examination still further beneficial, every man should oblige himself to a certain method in it. As every man has something particular in his nature, stronger inclinations to some vices than others, some infirmities that stick closer to him, and are harder to be conquered than others; and as it is as easy for every man to know this of himself, as to know whom he likes, or dislikes; so it is highly necessary, that these particularities of our natures and tempers should never escape a severe trial at our evening repentance; I say a severe trial, because nothing but a rigorous severity against these natural tempers, is sufficient to conquer hem.

They are the right eyes, that are not to be spared; but to be plucked out and cast from us. For as they are the infirmities of nature, so they have the strength of nature, and must be treated with great opposition, or they will soon be too strong for us. He therefore, who knows himself most of all subject to anger and passion, must be very exact and constant in his examination of this temper every evening. He must find out every slip that he has made of that kind, whether in thought, or word, or action; he must shame, and reproach, and accuse himself before God, for every thing that he has said or done in obedience to his passion. He must no more allow himself to forget the examination of this temper, than to forget his whole prayers.

Again; If you find that vanity is your prevailing temper, that is always putting you upon the adornment of your person, and catching every thing that compliments or flatters your abilities, never spare or forget this temper in your evening examination; but confess to God every vanity of thought, or word, or action, that you have been guilty of, and put yourself to all the shame and confusion for it that you can. In this manner should all people act with regard to their chief frailty, to which their nature most inclines them. And though it should not immediately do all that they would wish, yet by constant practice it would certainly in a short time produce its defired effect.

Farther: As all states and employments of life have their particular dangers and temptations, and expose people more to fome fins than others, fo every man that wifhes his own improvement, should make it a necessary part of his evening examination, to confider how he has avoided, or fallen into fuch fins as are most common to his state of life. For as our business and condition of life has great power over us, fo nothing but fuch watchfulness as this, can fecure us from those temptations to which it daily exposes us. The poor man, from his condition of life, is always in danger of repining and uneafinefs; the rich man is most exposed to fenfuality and indulgence; the tradefman to lying and unreasonable gains; the scholar to pride and vanity; so that in every Itate of life, a man should always, in his examination of himself, have a strict eye upon those faults, to which his ftate of life most of all exposes him.

Again; As it is reasonable to suppose, that every good man has entered into, or at least proposed to himself, some method of holy living, and set himself some such rules to observe, as are not common to other people, and only known to himself; so it should be a constant part of his night recollection, to examine how and in what degree, he has observed them, and to reproach himself before God, for every neglect of them. By rules, I here mean, such rules as relate to the well-ordering of our time, and the business of our common life. Such rules as prescribe a certain order to all that we are to do, our business, devotion, mortifications, readings, retirements, conversation, meals, refreshments, sleep and the like. Now as good rules relating to all these things, are certain means of great improvement, and such as all ferious Christians must needs propose to themselves, so they will hardly ever be observed to any purpose, unless they are made the constant subject of our evening examination.

Lastly, You are not to content yourself with a hasty general review of the day, but you must enter upon it with deliberation; begin with the first action of the day, and proceed step by step, through every particular matter that you have been concerned in, and so let no time, place or action be overlooked. An examination thus managed, will in a little time make you as different from yourself, as a wise man is different from an ideot. It will give you such a newness of mind, such a sprit of wisdom, and desire of perfection, as you was an entire stranger to before. Thus much concerning the evening examination.

I proceed now to lay before you fuch confiderations, as may fill your mind with a just dread and horror of all fin, and help you to confess your own in the most passionate contrition, and forrow of heart. Confider first, how odious all fin is to God, what a mighty baseness it is, and how abominable it renders sinners in the fight of God. That it is sin alone that makes the great difference betwint an angel, and the devil; and that every sinner is, so far as he sins, a friend of the devil's, and carrying on his work against God. That sin is a greater blemish and desilement of the foul, than any filth or difease is a desilement of the body. And to be content to live in sin, is a much greater baseness, than to desire to wallow in the mire, or leve any bodily impurity.

Confider how you must abhor a creature that delighted in nothing but filth and nastiness, that hated every thing thing that was decent and clean; and let this teach you to apprehend how odious that foul that delights in nothing but the impurity of fin, must appear unto God. For all fins, whether of fenfuality, pride, or falfeness, or any other irregular passion, are nothing else but the filth and impure ditease of the rational soul. And all righteousness is nothing else but the purity, the decency, the beauty and perfection of that spirit, which is made in the image of God.

Again; Learn what horror you ought to have for the guilt of fin, from the greatness of that atonement which has been made for it. God made the world by the breath of his mouth, by a word for king; but the redemption of the world has been a work of longer labour. How easily God can create beings, we learn from the first chapter of Genesis; but how difficult it is for infinite mercy to forgive fins, we learn from that costly atonement, those bloody facrifices, those pains and pernances, those sicknesses and deaths, which all must be undergone, before the guilty sinner is fit to appear in the presence of God.

Ponder these great truths: That the Son of God was forced to become man, to be partaker of all our infirmities; to undergo a poor, painful, miserable, and contemptible life; to be persecuted, hated, and at last nailed to a cross, that by such sufferings he might render God propitious to that nature in which he suffered. That all the bloody facrifices and atonements of the Jewish law, were to represent the necessity of this great facrifice, and the great displeasure God bore to sinners. That the world is still under the curse of sin and certain marks of God's displeasure at it; such as famines, plagues, tempests, sickness, diseases and death.

Confider that all the fons of Adam are to go through a painful, fickly life, denying and mortifying their natural appetites, and crucifying the luft of the flesh, in order to have a share in the atonement of our Saviour's death. That all their penances and self-denials, all their tears and repentance, are only made available by that great intercession, which is still making for them at the right hand of God.

O 6 demption

demption, all these facrifices and sufferings, both of God and man, are only to remove the guilt of sin; and then let this teach you with what tears and contrition, you ought to purge yourself from it. After this general consideration of the guilt of sin, which has done so much mischief to your nature, and exposed it to so great punishment, and made it so odious to God, that nothing less than so great an atonement of the Son of God, and so great repentance of our own, can restore us to the divine savour.

Consider next your own particular share in the guilt of sin. And if you would know with what zeal you ought to repent yourself, consider how you would exhort another sinner to repentance; and what repentance and amendment you would expect from him, whom you judged to be the greatest sinner in the world. Now this case every man may justly reckon to be his own. And you may fairly look upon yourself to be the greatest sinner that you know in the world.

For though you may know abundance of people to be guilty of fome gross fins, with which you cannot charge yourself, yet you may justly condemn yourself as the greatest sinner that you know. And that for these following reasons.

First, because you know more of the folly of your own heart, than you do of other people's; and can charge yourself with various sins, that you only know of yourself, and cannot be sure that other sinners are guilty of them. So that as you know more of the folly, the baseness, the pride, the deceitfulness and negligence of your own heart, than you do of any one's else, so you have just reason to consider yourself as the greatest sinner that you know: Because you know more of the greatness of your own sins, than you do of other people's.

Secondly, The greatness of our guilt arises chiefly from the greatness of God's goodness towards us, from the particular graces and blessings, the favours, the lights, and instructions that we have received from him.

Now as these graces and blessings, and the multitude of God's favours towards us, are the great aggravations of our sins against God, so they are only known to our-

felves. And therefore every finner knows more of the aggravation of his own guilt, than he does of other people's; and consequently may justly look upon himself to be the greatest sinner that he knows.

How good God hath been to other finners, what light and instruction he has vouchfased to them; what bleffings and graces they have received from him; how often he has touched their hearts with holy infpirations, you cannot tell. But all this you know of yourfelf; therefore you know greater aggravations of your own guilt, and are able to charge yourfelf with greater ingratitude than you can charge upon other people.

And this is the reason, why the greatest saints have in all ages condemned themselves as the greatest sinners, because they knew some aggravations of their own sins, which they could not know of other people's. The right way therefore to fill your heart with true contrition, and a deep fense of your own sins, is this: You are not to confider, or compare the outward form or course of your life, with that of other people's, and then think yourfelf to be less finful than they, because the outward course of your life is less finful than theirs. But in order to know your own guilt, you must consider your own particular circumstances, your health, your sickness, your youth, or age, your particlar calling, the happiness of your education, the degrees of light and instruction that you have received, the good men that you have converfed with, the admonitions that you have had, the good books that you have read, the numberless multitude of divine bleffings, graces, and favours, that you have received, the good motions of grace that you have refifted, the refolutions of amendment that you have fo often broken, and the checks of conscience that you have disregarded. For it is from these circumstances, that every one is to state the measure and greatness of his own guilt. And as you know only these circumstances of your own fins, fo you must necessarily know how to charge yourself with higher degrees of guilt, than you can charge upon other people. God Almighty knows greater finners it may be, than you are; because he sees and knows the circumstances of all mens sins: But your own heart, if it is faithful to you, can discover no guilt fo great as your own; because it can only see in you those circumstances, on which great part of the guilt of sin is founded. You may see sins in other people, that you cannot charge upon yourself; but then you know a number of circumstances of your own guilt, that you cannot lay to their charge. And perhaps that person that appears at such a distance from your virtue, and so odious in your eyes, would have been much better than you are, had he been altogether in your circumstances, and received all the same favours and graces from God that you have.

This is a very humbling reflection, and very proper for those people to make, who measure their virtue, by comparing the outward course of their lives with that of other people's. For look at whom you will, however different from you in his way of life, yet you can never know that he has refifted fo much divine grace as you have; or that in all your circumstances, he would not have been much truer to his duty than you are. Now this is the reason why I defired you to consider, how you would exhort that man to confess, and bewail his fine, whom you looked upon to be one of the greatest finners. Because if you will deal justly, you must fix. the charge at home, and look no farther than yourfelf. For God has given no one any power of knowing the true greatness of any fins, but his own; and therefore the greatest sinner that every one knows is himself. You may easily see how such a one in the outward course of his life breaks the laws of God; but then you can never fay, that had you been exactly in all his circumstances, that you should not have broken them more than he has done. A ferious and frequent reflection upon these things, will mightily tend to humble us in our own eyes, make us very apprehensive of the greatness of our own guilt, and very tender in centuring and condemning other people, for who would dare to be fevere against other people, when, for ought he can tell, the feverity of God may be more due to him, than to them? Who would exclaim against the guilt of others, when he confiders that he knows more of the greatness of his own guilt, than he does of theirs? How often you have refifted God's holy Spirit; how many motives to goodness

you.

you have difregarded; how many particular bleffings you have finned against; how many good resolutions you have broken; how many checks and admonitions of conscience you have stifled, you very well know: But how often this has been the case of other suners, you know not. And therefore the greatest sinner that you know must be yourself.

Whenever therefore you are angry at fin or finners, whenever you read or think of God's indignation and wrath at wicked men, let this teach you to be the most fevere in your censure, and most humble and contrite in the acknowledgment and confession of your own fins, because you know of no sinner equal to yourself.

Lastly, to conclude this chapter: Having thus examined and confessed your fins at this hour of the evening, you must afterwards look upon yourself, as still obliged to betake yourfelf to prayer again just before you go to bed. The subject that is most proper for your prayers at that time, is death. Let your prayers therefore then be wholly upon it, reckoning up all the dangers, uncertainties, and terrors of death; let them contain every thing that can affect and awaken your mind into just apprehensions of it. Let your petitions be all for right fentiments of the approach and importance of death; and beg of God, that your mind may be possessed with fuch a fense of its nearness, that you may have it always in your thoughts, do every thing as in fight of it, and make every day, a day for preparation for it. Represent to your imagination, that your bed is your grave; that all things are ready for your interment; that you are to have no more to do with this world; and that it will be owing to God's great mercy, if you ever fee the light of the Sun again, or have another day to add to your works of piety. And then commit yourself to sleep, as into the hands of God; as one that is to have no more opportunities of doing good; but is to awake amongst spirits that are separate from the body, and waiting for the judgment of the last great day.

Such a folemn refignation of yourfelf into the hands of God every evening, and parting with all the world, as if you was never to fee it any more, and all this in the filence and darkness of the night, is a practice that will foon have excellent effects upon your spirit. For this time of the night is exceeding proper for such prayers and meditations; and the likeness which sleep and darkness have to death, will contribute very much to make your thoughts about it the more deep and affecting. So that I hope you will not let a time, so proper for such prayers, be ever passed over without them.

CHAP. XXIV.

The Conclusion. Of the Excellency, & Greatness of a devout Spirit.

I HAVE now finished what I intended in this Treatise.
I have explained the nature of devotion, both as it fignifies a life devoted to God, and as it fignifies a regular method of daily prayer. I have now only to add a word or two in recommendation of a life governed by this spirit of devotion. For though it is as reasonable to suppose it the defire of all Christians to arrive at Christian perfection, as to suppose, that all fick men defire to be restored to perfect health; yet experience shews us, that nothing wants more to be preffed, repeated and forced upon minds, than the plainest rules of Christianity. Voluntary poverty, virginity, and devout retirement, have been here recommended, as things not necessary, yet highly beneficial to those that would make the way to perfection the most easy and certain. But Christian perfection itself is tied to no particular form of life; but is to be attained, though not with the fame eafe, in every flate of life. 'This has been fully afferted in another place; where it has been shewn that Christian perfection calls no one (necessarily) to a cloyster, but to the full performance of those duties, which are necessary for all Christians, and common to all states of life. Christ. Perfect. p2. So that the whole of the matteris plainly this: Virginity, voluntary poverty, and fuch other restraints of lawful things, are not necessary to Christian perfection; but are much to be commended in those, who chuse them as helps and means of a more safe and speedy arrival at it. It is only in this manner, and in this fense, that I would recommend any particularity of life; not as if perfection confifted in it, but because of its great tendency to produce and support the true spirit of Christian perfection. But the thing which is here pressed upon all, is, a life of great and strict devotion; which, I think, has been sufficiently shewn to be equally the duty and happiness of all orders of men. Neither is there any thing in any particular state of life, that can be justly pleaded as a reason for any abatement of a devout spirit.

But because in this polite age of ours, we have so lived away the spirit of devotion, that many seem assaid even to be suspected of it, imagining great devotion to be great bigotry; that is sounded in ignorance and poorness of spirit, and that little, weak, and dejected minds, are generally the greatest proficients in it: It shall here be fully shewn, that great devotion is the noblest temper of the greatest and noblest souls; and that they who think it receives any advantage from ignorance and poorness of spirit, are themselves not a little, but entirely ignorant of the nature of devotion, the nature of God, and the nature of themselves.

People of fine parts and learning, or of great knowledge in worldly matters, may perhaps think it hard to have their want of devotion charged upon their ignorance. But if they will be content to be tried by reason and scripture, it may soon be made appear, that a want of devotion, where-ever it is, either amongst the learned or unlearned, is founded in gross ignorance, and the greatest blindness and insensibility that can happen to a rational creature. And that devotion is fo far from being the effect of a little and dejected mind, that it must and will be always highest in the most perfect natures. And first, Who reckons it a sign of a poor, little mind, for a man to be full of reverence and duty to his parents, to have the truest love and honour for his friend, or to excel in the highest instances of gratitude to his benefactor? Are not these tempers in the highest degree in the most exalted and perfect minds? And yet what is high devotion, but the highest exercise of these tempers, of duty, reverence, love, honour, and gratitude to the amiable, glorious parent, friend, and benefactor of all mankind; Is it a true greatness of mind, to reverence the authority of your parents, to fear the displeasure of your friend, to dread the reproaches of your benefactor? and must not this fear and dread, and reverence, be much more just and reasonable, and honourable, when they are in the highest degree towards God? Now as the higher these tempers are, the more are they esteemed amongst men, and are allowed to be so much the greater proofs of a true greatness of mind; so the higher and greater these same tempers are towards God, so much the more do they prove the nobility, excellence, and greatness of the mind. So that so long as duty to parents, love to friends, and gratitude to benefactors, are thought great and honourable tempers; devotion, which is nothing else but duty, love, and gratitude to God, must have the highest place amongst our highest virtues.

If a prince out of his mere goodness should fend you a pardon by one of his slaves, would you not think it a part of your duty to receive the slave with marks of love, esteem, and gratitude for his great kindness, in bringing you so great a gift; and at the same time think it a meanness and poorness of spirit, to shew love, esteem, and gratitude to the Prince, who of his own goodness freely sent you the pardon? And yet this would be as reasonable, as to suppose that love, esteem, honour, and gratitude, are noble tempers, and instances of a great foul, when they are paid to our fellow-creatures; but the effects of a poor, ignorant dejected mind, when they are paid to God.

Farther; That part of devotion which expresses itself in forrowful confession, and penitential tears of a broken and contrite heart, is very far from being any sign of a little and ignorant mind. For who does not acknowledge it an instance of an ingenuous, generous, and brave mind, to acknowledge a fault, and ask pardon for any offence? And are not the finest and most improved minds, the most remarkable for this excellent temper? Is it not also allowed, that the ingenuity and excellence of a man's spirit is much shewn when his forrow and indignation at himself rises in proportion to the folly of his crime, and the goodness and greatness of the person he has offended? Now if things are thus, then the greater any man's mind is, the more he knows of God and himself, the more will he be disposed to prostrate himself before God in all the humblest acts and expressions of repentance. And the greater the ingenuity, the generosity, judgment, and penetration of his mind is, the more will he exercise and indulge a passionate, tender sense of God's just displeasure; and the more he knows of the greatness, the goodness, and perfection of the divine nature, the fuller of shame and confusion will he be at his own fins and ingratitude. And on the other hand, the more dull and ignorant any soul is, the more base and ungenerous it naturally is, the more senseless it is of the goodness and purity of God; so much the more averse will it be to all acts of humble confession and repentance.

Devotion therefore is fo far from being best suited to little ignorant minds, that a true elevation of soul, a lively sense of honour, and great knowledge of God and ourselves, are the greatest natural helps that our devotion hath.

And on the other hand, it shall hear be made appear by variety of arguments, that indevotion is founded in the most excessive ignorance.

And, First, Our bleffed Lord, and his apostles, were eminent instances of great and frequent devotion. Now if we will grant, (as all christians must grant) that their great devotion was founded in a true knowledge of the nature of devotion, the nature of God, and the nature of man; then it is plain, that all those that are insensible of the duty of devotion, are in this excessive state of ignorance, they neither know God, nor themselves, nor devotion. For if a right knowledge in these three respects, produces great devotion, as in the case of our Saviour and his apostles, then a neglect of devotion must be chargeable upon ignorance.

Again; How comes it that most people have recourse to devotion, when they are in sickness, distress, or fear of death? Is it not because this state shews them more of the want of God, and their own weakness, than they perceive at other times? Is it not because their infirmities, their approaching end convinces them of something, which they did not half perceive before? Now if devotion at these seasons, is the effect of a better knowledge of God, and ourfelves, then the neglect of devotion at other times, is always owing to great ignorance of God and ourfelves.

Farther; As indevotion is ignorance, fo it is the most fhameful ignorance, and fuch as is to be charged with the greatest folly. This will fully appear to any one that confiders, by what rules we are to judge of the excellency of any knowledge, or the shamefulness of any ignorance. Now knowledge itself would be no excellence, nor ignorance any reproach to us, but that we are rational creatures. But if this be true, then it follows plainly, that that knowledge which is most fuitable to our rational nature, and which most concerns us, as fuch to know, is our highest, finest knowledge; and that ignorance which relates to things that are most effential to us, as rational creatures, and which we are most concerned to know, is, of all others, the most gross and fliameful ignorance. If therefore there be any things that concern us more than others, if there be any truths that are more to us than all others, he that has the fullest knowledge of these things, that sees these truths in the clearest, strongest light, has, of all others, as a rational creature, the clearest understanding, and the strongest parts. If therefore our relation to God, be our greatest relation, if our advancement in his favour be our highest advancement, he that has the highest notions of the excellence of this relation, he that most strongly perceives the highest worth, and great value of holiness and virtue, that judges every thing little, when compared with it, proves himself to be master of the best, and most excellent knowledge. If a judge had fine skill in painting, architecture, and music, but at the fame time had gross and confused notions of equity, and a poor, dull apprehension of the value of justice, who would feruple to reckon him a poor ignorant judge? If a bishop should be a man of great address and skill in the arts of preferment, and understanding how to raife and enrich his family in the world, but should have no tafte or fenfe of the maxims and principles of the faints and fathers of the church; if he did not conceive the holy nature, and great obligations of his calling, and judge it better to be crucified to the world, than to live idly in pomp and fplendor, who would fcruple to charge fuch a bishop with want of understanding? If we do not judge, and pronounce after this manner, our reason and judgment are but empty sounds. But now, if a judge is to be reckoned ignorant, if he does not feel or perceive the value and worth of justice; if a bishop is to be looked upon as void of understanding, if he is more experienced in other things, than in the exalted virtues of his apostolical calling; than all common christiains are to be looked upon as more or less knowing, accordingly as they know more or less of those great things, which are the common and greatest concern of all Christians. If a gentleman should fancy that the Moon is no bigger than it appears to the eye, that it shines with its own light, that all the Stars are only fo many fpots of light; if after reading books of Aftronomy, he should still continue in the same opinion, most people would think he had but a poor apprehenfion. But if the fame person should think it better to provide for a short life here, than to prepare for a glorious eternity hereafter, that it was better to be rich than to be eminent in piety, his ignorance and dulnefs would be too great to be compared to any thing elfe.

There is no knowledge that deferves fo much as the name of it, but that which we call judgment. And that is the most clear and improved understanding, which judges best of the value and worth of things, all the rest is but the capacity of an animal, is but mere seeing and hearing.

And there is no excellence of any knowledge in us, till we exercise our judgment, and judge well of the value and worth of things. If a man had eyes that could see beyond the Stars, or pierce into the heart of the earth, but could not see the things that were before him, or discern any thing that was serviceable to him, we should reckon that he had but a very bad sight. If another had ears that received sounds from the world in the Moon, but could hear nothing that was done upon earth, we should look upon him to be as bad as deas. In like manner, if a man has a memory that can retain a great many things; if he has a wit that is sharp and acute in arts and sciences, or an imagination that can wander agreeably ably in fictions, but has a dull, poor apprehension of his duty and relation to God, of the value of piety, or the worth of moral virtue, he may very justly be reckoned to have a bad understanding. He is but like the man that can only fee and hear fuch things as are of no benefit to him. As certain therefore as piety, virtue, and eternal happiness are of the most concern to man, as certain as the immortality of our nature, and relation to God, are the most glorious circumstances of our nature, so certain is it, that he who dwells most in contemplation of them, whose heart is most affected with them, who fees farthest into them, who best comprehends the value and excellency of them, who judges all worldly attainments to be mere bubbles and shadows, in comparifon of them, proves himfelf to have of all others the fineft understanding, and the strongest judgment. And if we do not reason after this manner, or allow this method of reasoning, we have no arguments to prove, that there is any fuch thing as a wife man, or a fool. For a man is proved to be a natural, not because he wants any of his fenfes, or is incapable of every thing, but because he has no judgment, and is entirely ignorant of the worth and value of things, he will perhaps chuse a fine coat rather than a large estate. And as the essence of flupidity confifts in the entire want of judgment, in an ignorance of the value of things; fo on the other hand, the effence of wifdom and knowledge must consist in the excellency of our judgment, or in the knowledge of the worth and value of things. This therefore is an undeniable proof, that he who knows most of the value of the best things, who judges most rightly of the things which are of most concern to him, who had rather have his foul in a state of Christian perfection, than the greateft share of worldly happiness, has the highest wildom, and is at the farthest distance from men that are naturals, that any knowledge can place him. On the other hand, he that can talk the learned languages, and repeat a great deal of Hiftory, but prefers the indulgence of his body to the purity and perfection of his foul, who is more concerned to get a name, or an estate here, than to live in eternal glory hereafter, is in the nearest state to that natural, who chuses a painted coat, rather than a large estate. He is not called a natural by men, but he must appear to God, and heavenly beings, as in a more excessive state of stupidity, and will sooner or later certainly

But now if this be undeniably plain, that we cannot prove a man to be a fool, but by fhewing that he has no knowledge of things that are good and evil to himfelf, then it is undeniably plain, that we cannot prove a man to be wife, but by fhewing that he has the fulleft knowledge of things that are his greatest good, and his greatest evil. If therefore God be our greatest good; if there can be no good but in his favour, nor any evil but in departing from him, than it is plain, that he who judges it the best thing he can do to please God to the utmost of his power, who worships and adores him with all his heart and foul, who had rather have a pious mind than all the dignities and honours in the world, shews himself to be in the highest state of human wisdom.

To proceed; We know how our bleffed Lord acted in an human body; it was his meat and drink to do the will of his Father which is in heaven. And if any number of heavenly spirits were to leave their habitations in the light of God, and be for a while united to human bodies, they would certainly tend towards God in all their actions, and be as heavenly as they could, in a

They would certainly act in this manner, because they would know that God was the only good of all spirits; and that whether they were in the body or out of the body, in heaven or on earth, they must have every degree of their greatness and happiness from God alone. All human spirits therefore, the more exalted they are, the more they know their divine original, the nearer they come to heavenly spirits, by so much the more will they live to God in all their actions, and make their whole life a state of devotion. Devotion therefore is the greatest sign of a great and noble genius, it supposes a soul in its highest state of knowledge; and none but little and blinded minds, that are sunk into ignorance and vanity, are destitute of it.

If an human spirit should imagine some mighty Prince to be greater than God, we should take it for a poor, ignorant creature; all people would acknowledge fuch an imagination to be the height of stupidity. But if this fame human spirit should think it better to be devoted to fome mighty Prince, than to be devoted to God, would not this still be a greater proof of a poor, ignorant, and blinded nature? Yet this is what all people do, who think any thing better, greater, or wifer than a devout life. So that which way foever we confider this matter, it plainly appears, that devotion is an inftance of great judgment, of an elevated nature; and the want of devotion is a certain proof of the want of understanding. The greatest spirits of the heathen world, such as Phythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Epictetus, Marcus, Antoninus, &c. owed all their greatness to the spirit of devotion. They were full of God; their wifdom and deep contemplations tended only to deliver men from the vanity of the world, the flavery of bodily passions, that they might act as spirits that came from God, and were soon to return to him.

Again; To fee the dignity and greatness of a devout spirit, we need only compare it with other tempers that are chosen in the room of it. St John tells us, that all in the world (that is, all the tempers of a worldly life) as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Let us therefore consider, what wisdom or excellency of mind there is required to qualify a man for these delights. Let us suppose a man given up to the pleasures of the body; furely this can be no fign of a fine mind, or an excellent spirit; For if he has but the temper of an animal, he is great enough for these enjoyments. Let us suppose him to be devoted to honours and splendours, to be fond of glitter and equipage; now if this temper required any great parts or fine understanding to make a man capable of it, it would prove the world to abound with great wits. Let us suppose him to be in love with riches, and to be fo eager in the pursuit of them, as never to think he has enough; now this passion is so far from fuppofing any excellent fenfe, or great understanding, that blindness and folly are the best supports Let us lastly suppose him in another light, not fingly devoted to any of these passions, but as it mostly happens, governed by all of them in their turns;

does this shew a more exalted nature, than to spend his days in the fervice of any one of them? For to have a taste for these things, and to be devoted to them, is so far from arguing any tolerable parts or understanding, that they are fuited to the dullest, weakest minds, and require only a great deal of pride and folly to be greatly admired. But now let Libertines bring any fuch charge as this if they can, against devotion. They may as well endeavour to charge light with every thing that belongs to darkness. Let them but grant that there is a God, and Providence, and then they have granted enough to justify the wisdom, and support the honour of devotion. For if there is an infinitely wife and good creature, in whom we live, move and have our being, whose providence governs all things in all places, furely it must be the highest act of our understanding to conceive rightly of him; it must be the noblest instance of judgment, the most exalted temper of our nature, to worship and adore this univerfal providence, to conform to its laws, to study its wisdom, and to live and act every where, as in the presence of this infinitely good and wife Creator. Now he that lives thus, lives in the fpirit of devotion. And what can flew fuch great parts, and fo fine an understanding, as to live in this temper. For if God is wisdom, furely he must be the wisest man in the world, who most conforms to the wisdom of God, who best obeys his providence, who enters farthest into his defigns, and does all he can, that God's will may be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. A devout man makes a true use of his reason; he sees through the vanity of the world, discovers the corruption of his nature, and the blindness of his passions. He lives by a law which is not visible to vulgar eyes; he enters into the world of spirits; he compares the greatest things, sets eternity against time; and chuses rather to be for ever great in the presence of God, when he dies, than to have the greatest share of worldly pleasures whilst he lives. He that is devout, is full of these great thoughts; he lives upon these noble reflections, and conducts himfelf by rules and principles, which can only be apprehended, admired and loved by reason. There is nothing therefore that shews so great a genius, nothing that so raifes us above vulgar fpirits, nothing that fo plainly declares an heroic greatness of mind, as great devotion. When you suppose a man to be a faint, or all devotion, you have raifed him as much above all other conditions of life, as a Philosopher is above an animal.

Lastly, Courage and bravery are words of a great found, and feem to fignify an heroic spirit; but yet humility, which feems to be the lowest, meanest part of devotion, is a more certain argument of a noble and courageous mind. For humility contends with greater enemies, is more constantly engaged, more violently affaulted, bears more, fuffers more, and requires greater courage to support itself, than any instances of worldly bravery. A man that dares be poor and contemptible in the eyes of the world, to approve himfelf to God; that relifts and rejects all human glory, that opposes the clamour of his passions, that meekly puts up all injuries and wrongs, and dares ftay for his reward till the invifible hand of God gives to every one their proper places, endures a much greater trial, and exerts a nobler fortitude, than he that is bold and daring in the fire of battle. For the boldness of a soldier, if he is a stranger to the fpirit of devotion, is rather weakness than fortitude; it is at best but mad passion, and heated spirits, and has no more true valour in it than the fury of a tyger. For as we cannot lift up a hand, or ftir a foot, but by a power that is lent us from God; fo bold actions that are not directed by the laws of God, or fo many executions of his will, are no more true bravery, than fedate malice is Christian patience.

Reason is our universal law, that obliges us in all places, and at all times; and no actions have any honour, but so far as they are instances of our obedience to reason. And it is as base and cowardly, to be bold and daring against the principle of reason and justice, as to be

Would we therefore exercise a true fortitude, we must do all in the spirit of devotion, be valiant against the corruptions of the world, and the lusts of the sless, and the temptations of the devil; for to be daring and courageous against these enemies, is the noblest bravery that an human mind is capable of.

I have made this digression, for the sake of those, who think a great devotion to be bigotry and poorness of spirit; that by these considerations they may see, how poor, and mean all other tempers are, if compared to it. That they may see, that all worldly attainments, whether of greatness, wisdom or bravery, are but empty sounds; and there is nothing wise or great, or noble, in an human spirit, but rightly to know, and heartily worship and adore the great God, that is the support and life of all spirits, whether in heaven or on earth.
